Nato uses rebel intelligence

The KLA is helping to spot Serb tanks and artillery for Nato's pilots. writes Anthony Loyd in Skopie

NATO is using intelligence supplied by the Kosovo Liberation Army on the ground to help its planes to locate and destroy Serb positions in the war-torn province.

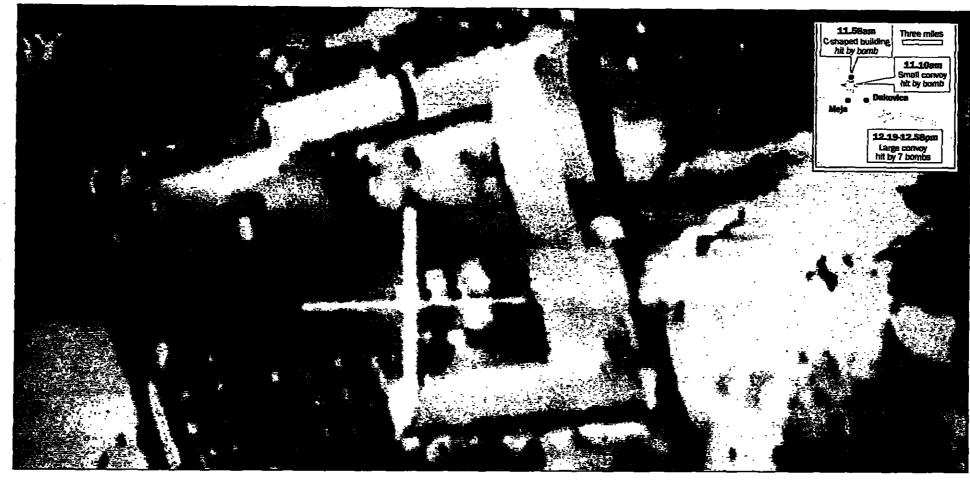

Despite repeated claims by Nato that it has no formal links with the rebel fighters, The Times has witnessed how the rebel fighters, using with satellite telephones, are providing detailed reconnaissance for Nato bombers. The intelligence is passed to Western handlers" who relay the targets to the alliance, enabling Nato to claim that it has no "formal links" with the rebels.

In one exchange this week Sokol Bashota, a member of the KLA general headquarters staff, sent an urgent message from Berisa mountain, 22 miles west of Pristina, giving the location of Serb tanks and artillery around the villages of Orlate, Kisna Reka and Trnere. The voice on the satellite line sounded tinny, disembodied and stressed and the infortored by the Serbs, but there was no mistaking the urgency of the call:

There is no escape for anyone in this area ... the Serbs are attacking us from three directions and have forces to the south ... we are trapped and need Nato's help ... we have 40.000 civilians plus on the mountain . . many have been living under open skies for three weeks now ... exposure and hunger . . . no medical supplies . . . shelling us . . need urgent Nato intervention . . . However, it will be many hours, at best, before Nato jets react to the call. Because of the organisation's reluctance to deal directly with the KLA the information has to be relayed first through a Western diplo-mat in Macedonia, then conduited to a Nato officer, before ed upon, having passed again through another set of command filters. There is the real danger that the Serbs can pick up Mr Bashota's call, complete their mission and redeploy their tanks and artillery before the KLA commander's information is anywhere near being transposed onto a target list for a Nato pilot.

At pains to distance itself from the separatists, while at the same time accepting that both parties share a common enemy, Nato has emphasised that it has no direct dealings with the rebels. There is a concern within Nato that once its troops are inside Kosovo

revamps media strategy BY ROLAND WATSON AND CHARLES BREMNER

NATO last night offered its fullest explanation yet of the bombing of civilian refugees as Downing Street's new influence over the alliance's media strategy began to take hold. In an attempt to draw a line under the most damaging incident of the four-week cam-paign, Nato admitted for the first time that its jets had attacked two separate convoys last Wednesday.

The admission was delivered in unprecedented fashion by US Brigadier General Daniel Leaf.

His testimony marked an attempt by Nato chiefs in Brussels to make a clean breast of the incident which has been marked by confusion since last Wednesday.

The strategy was pieced together with Alastair Campbell, the Prime Minister's press secretary, who moved to Nato centre stage yesterday. His involvement, which is likely to continue throughout the conflict, came as the Government took a lead in bolstering the alliance's communications strategy.

Other Whitehall officials are likely to follow, and Mr Campbell wants other Nato governments to help beef up the communications team.

Ulster's silent bystanders see a bleak future

Martin Fletcher reports on how last year's optimism has turned to anathy over stalled Good Friday accord

ONE year ago a remarkable 675,966 Northern Ireland voters marched to the polls to record their overwhelming support for the Good Friday peace accord. Today they are silent bystanders as the accord threatens to collapse.

Last May 71 per cent of a near-record turnout backed a deal to end 30 years of conflict and restore self-government for the first time since 1974. Today their optimism has turned to weary resignation.

One of the paradoxes about Northern Ireland is that the common man is uncommonly well informed about politics. but very reluctant to become politically engaged.

Politics here is highly polar-ised, highly adversarial and of-ten dangerous. Party member-ship is half the British average. Before last year politicians had singularly failed to deliver, and the great majority of people had given up on them. Now it seems that after that short period of hope they are turning off once more.

The stakes for the province are huge, but there have been no pro-accord railies outside Stormont, no clarion calls from civic leaders, no popular petitions and no flood of letters to local newspapers. It has al-ways been easier to whip up opposition than support in Northern Ireland, and the only significant political demonstrations in recent weeks have been mounted by the accord's opponents. The Women's Coalition and two other small political par-ties recently paid £7,000 for 30 purple billboard posters de-claring "The Good Friday Agreement — It Can Work. It Will Work. Make It Work". In March the local CBI, Trade Union movement and Council for Voluntary Action persuaded 200 businesses and other aging the politicians to "complete the transition to a nor-

DEADLOCK REMAINS

Tony Blair and Bertie Ahern, the Irish Prime Minister, failed to break the deadlock over IRA disarmament during five hours of intense talks at Downing Street yester-day, but agreed that suspending the Good Friday accord over the summer was too dangerous.

They held successive meetings with the leaders of the Ulster Unionist Party, Sinn Fein and the nationalist SDLP, but Mr Ahern conceded afterwards that little progress had been made.

He said that the Unionists and Sinn Fein would both have to make concessions to end the impasse caused by the IRA's refusal to start disarming and David Trimble's refusal to admit Sinn Fein to government until it does. The two Prime Ministers convene another round of talks next week.

mal and democratic society". But that is about all.

At a time when the Government needs maximum pressure put on the province's political leaders there is very little. There's a dull acceptance of fate." said a senior member of the editorial team of the Belfast Telegraph. "There's a si-lence as people sit back and wait to see what happens next."

People felt "really power-less", said Quintin Oliver, the lobbyist whose "Yes Campaign" helped to generate last May's 81 per cent turnout. Some had succumbed to "apathy and disillusion". Others were clinging to a "naive optimism" that the peace process would surmount this crisis as it had so many others. The people of Northern Ireland have seen umpteen peace initiatives founder over the past three decades. "We were able momentarily to mobilise people into a vote last year, but people are now thinking its real shrug time," Mr Oliver said. "The weariness is now writ larger because of the expectations and hope engendered last year. In some ways the distance from the political process is greater because they elected people last June and those people have not been engaging with them on breadand-hutter issues.

Another reason for the lack of public pressure is that the people are as divided as the politicians in their interpretations of the accord. Most Protestants side with Unionist demands for IRA disarmament before Sinn Fein can join an executive. Most nationalists believe the executive should be formed immediately. "The public also want a settlement on their terms. That makes it hard for the public to unite," said Seamus McAleavey, director of the Northern Ireland Council for Voluntary Action.

That lack of unity is compounded by the even deeper split within Unionism. Polls suggest that after a year in which 260 terrorist prisoners have been freed without any reciprocal gesture from the IRA, a majority of Unionists now oppose the accord. The News Letter, Northern Ireland's Unionist newspaper, is receiving six letters against the the accord for every one that supports it, and most of those are from political activists.

A full year after the accord was clinched it remains unimplemented. It is now increasingly likely that Northern Ireland will have to suffer the embarrassment of watching London devolve power to Scotland and Wales first.

Report on PC's killing calls for police training

By Alexandra Frean, social affairs correspondent

POLICE officers should be acted in "good faith", the regiven special training in dealing with mentally-ill people who are known to be violent. a report into the killing of a young woman police officer recommended yesterday. The report into the death of PC Nina Mackay, 25, in October 1997 criticised the police, social workers and the National Health Service. PC Mackay was stabbed to death by Magdi Elgizouli, a paranoid schizophrenic, when she used a hydraulic ram to batter down the door of his flat in Stratford, East London, after he had jumped bail for an earlier offence. Elgizouli, 30, was detained indefinitely at Rampton hospital last year after being found guilty of manslaughter. The independent inquiry team found that Elgizouli had been granted bail ten days before he killed PC Mackay, despite having a history of violence and severe mental illness.

port questioned why the Armed Territorial Support Group, of which PC Mackay was a part, was sent to arrest Elgizouli without first gaining sufficient information about his background.

The inquiry criticised social services for failing to provide adequate housing and support for Elgizouli and the health services for failing to pass on vital information about his mental state to GPs when he moved. It recommended that the police undertake a review with health and social services of how to respond to potentially violent mentally-ili people.

Sally Retrieves, director of public health for Kensington and Chelsea and Westmin-ster Health Authority, said all the agencies involved accepted the report's recommendations. "We have a duty to PC Mackay's family and to Mr Elgizouli and his family to try to ensure such tragedies While accepting that police are prevented," she said.

Neo-Nazis admit bombing

As police began investigating the call senior detectives revealed that the bomb was made with 6 to 10lb of nails up to six inches long. Thirty-nine people were taken to hospital after the attack at the edge of a street market, and yesterday 15 were still receiving hospital treatment including two men who could lose their sight.

Combat 18 was formed in 1992 from the internal security wing of the British National Party. It takes its name from the initials of Adolf Hitler's name, and members have been jailed for violent attacks and racist literature.

Yesterday Deputy Assistant Commissioner Alan Fry, head of Scotland Yard's anti-terrorist branch, said the call could be a hoax or an attempt by Combat 18 to court publicity but the claim was being investigated. He said that many possible suspects were still being considered and nothing had been ruled in or out.

He said: "This call should be taken with extreme caution. It is a line of inquiry and it is being taken very seriously but there is no evidence or intelligence at this time which supports the claim." Mr Fry said Combat 18 had been linked to activities in south London including the Eltham area but not to Brixton.

Commander Hugh Orde, in charge of crime operations in south London, said extra police patrols are being put on the Brixton streets to reassure the public.

Party joker is crowned clown prince of world

By SIMON DE BRUXELLES SOUTH WEST CORRESPONDENT

HE DOES not juggle, ride a unicycle, walk on stilts or throw custard pies, yet Kooky the Clown has won the ultimate accolade in the serious world of buffoonery. The children's entertainer from Wiltshire, who has yet to become a household name outside his village, was yesterday awarded the title International Clown of the Year. Andy Stevens, 56, impressed judges from the US-based World Clown Association with off-the-cuff humour forged at children's birthday parties across the West Country.

It is the first time that the title has gone outside America, where clowning is no laughing matter. Every major city has an annual "Clown Alley", when local performers get the chance to put on their make-up and costumes and make fools of themselves.

Mr Stevens, a grandfather, has been a regular visitor to clown conventions and clown training camps in America since he first donned the red nose and orange wig more than 30 years ago.

His public appearances in Britain have largely been confined to church fêtes and Devizes carnival, where Kooky made his debut in 1966. That was when Mr Stevens discovered he a gift for impromptu humour.

He said: "I was carrying an umbrel-la with big round holes in it and everyone wanted to know why. So I told them. How else will I know when it starts raining?"

The jokes have not improved since, which is why Kooky's audiences are mostly aged between three and seven. He arrives at each engagement in his old Volvo estate dressed in full clown costume and heavy make up. Fellow motorists look startled but the children start laughing the moment that the first 18in bulbous red shoe emerges from the car and do not stop until two hours later, when he packs up to go home to Easterton.

Last year Mr Stevens became the first and only clown to be honoured by the Guild of Master Craftsmen, which usually recognises the work of carpenters, farriers and other traditional trades. The latest award is the crowning moment of his career as a clown.

Mr Stevens said: "I am chuffed to bits to win this award. It is the ultimate accolade for any clown. The nudges have seen me in action over the years in front of the children in the States and they also know I do a lot of work for clowning. It is fantastic to be the first non-American clown to win the award because clowning is just so much more popular over there. Americans love to go all out on everything -Hallowe'en, Christmas, birthdays. Here in Britain we do suffer a lot more from the old stiff upper lip."

In the clowns' lexicon, Kooky - pronounced Cookie — is an auguste. The name comes from Berlin slang for a fool and is part of a tradition that can be traced back through the street entertainers of the Middle Ages to the theatres of ancient Greece and Rome.

Mr Stevens is a self-taught clown. unlike many of his American counterparts, who are trained to perform every trick and to act out well-rehearsed

He said: "I never rehearse because I always ad lib. I had to give a performStates and when I went on stage I had absolutely no idea what I was going to do. I ended up giving a performance with one balloon that lasted 20 minutes and had them in stitches."

While some of his American colleagues enjoy performing for children 'as long as they don't get too close", for Mr Stevens the rapport with his audience is what make the job worthwhile. He said: "Entertaining is fun and en-tertaining children is the best job in the world. I have always taken my clowning seriously but I don't know if it's true that underneath the make-up most clowns are sad. I've certainly never met a rich one.

As Mr Stevens's flat fee of £80, plus travel expenses, includes the hour that it takes to transform himself into Kooky with the help of theatrical 'slap", he cannot be said to be laughing all the way to the bank.

For the past nine years he has been overseas director of the Clowns of America International, advising the organisation's 300 British members.

He is confident that there is a rosy future for clowning, even though circus-es in Britain have been severely curtailed by animal rights campaigners. There are many more clowns around than when I started out in the 1960s,"

"When I began, there was no one you could turn to tell you what to do. I had to make it up as I went along. "Kids nowadays may be into computer games and videos but they still all

Three centuries of funny business

CLOWNING has always been an international business, but Britain can daim a fair share of its honours. Even our two most recent Prime Ministers come from circus families: John Major's father was a clowning trapeze artist and Tony Blair's grandfather was a circus entertainer. The founding father of downing in this country is acknowledged to have been Joseph Grimaldi, Desnite his Italian name and family origins, he was born in London in 1779, dying in 1837. His act completed the emergence of the modern down from the Italian commedia dell' arte, which provided Arlecchino (Harlequin) in the 16th century with a grotesque costume that may be partly derived from medieval mystery plays. Grimaldi is lovingly commemorated annually by a congregation of downs at their own church, Holy Trinity, in Dalston, East London. Grimaldi not only laid the foundations of modern circus clowning but also set the precedent for pantomime dames, a guise in which he was followed by his most accomplished pupil, Dan Leno.

which was Pio Nock's last appearance in England, Other clowns popular in Britain were, like Grimaldi, of Italian origin. They included Luigi Folco, from one of Italy's most eelebrated circus families who became a star of Billy Smart's Circus: and Charlie Cairoli, who was a big hit with the Cirque Medrano in France (as Carletto) before his first appearance in Britain at the Blackpool Tower in 1939, where he stayed for the remaining 39 vears of his career. the Old Bailey yesterday.

Michael Palmer, 61, whose clients included Prince Michael of Kent and Mohamed Al Faved, is said to be a former M16 contact with a wide circle of friends including Lord Howe of Aberavon and Sir Leon Brittan.

Palmer pleaded guilty to 17 charges of conspiracy to defraud, theft, forgery and false accounting involving more than £250,000. He admitted siphoning £150,000 from the children's trust of which he was an executor and £100,000 from the estate of a close friend who had left his estate to a number of Aids charities after his death in 1994.

Palmer made two loans to Dodi Fayed, who died in the car crash in 1997 in which Diana, Princess of Wales was killed. The money was loaned through Allied Stars, a film production company of which Palmer was a director. The first loan of £58,000 was repaid with interest, which Palmer kept and the second, of £105,000 was eventually paid on Mr Fayed's behalf.

There was no suggestion of any impropriety on Mr

Fayed's part.
Palmer, of Moreton-in-Marsh, Gloucestershire, took the money from the estate of David and Jane Elton, of which he was a co-executor. In 1992 Mr Elton, who had lost his job as a director of Ultramar, the oil company when it was taken over by Lasmo, killed his wife and himself, leaving their two young chil-

Mr Hacking said that the beneficiaries and co-executor of the estate were "kept in the dark" about the loans, but that some of the stolen money had been repaid by Palmer and his former firm, Palmer Cowen.

The court was told that, with some of the money he stole from the Elton children, Palmer made loans to Jamshid Hashemi Naini, a Conservative Party donor and international conman, who was jailed in December for 38 months after pleading guilty to fraud charges totalling E3 million. As Hashemi's lawyer and director of some of the Iran-ian's companies, Palmer is said to have found himself submerged in the world of espionage, liaising with MI6 while Hashemi spied for Britain under cover of arranging weapons deals with Tehran. The Serious Fraud Office mounted an investigation into the activities of both men during the summer of 1996. Palmer had been on bail, and Sir Gordon Reece, the former adviser to Baroness Thatcher, stood surety. The court was told that at one stage Palmer has resorted to forgery to conceal his activities and told lies on behalf of a close friend, Phillipe Berthelon, who wanted to obtain a E120,000 mortgage on a flat in West London. of which Palmer was a Palmer secretly paid his M Berthelon £141,000 cash from the Elton estate, which was fol-lowed by a further £42,000 and other monies.

Mr Hacking told the court that Palmer had also stolen money from the estate of a friend, Geoffrey Roberts, who died in 1994, leaving Palmer, who was a trustee, £20,000 in his will. Mr Roberts, the court was told, also had £230,000 in a Swiss bank account known as the "birthday account". From that money he had wanted large bequests to go to three

Mr Justice Collins yesterday told Palmer: "It is always a tragedy to see someone like you in the dock having admitted serious dishonesty."

Many of Palmer's friends and clients had written to the court saying that they were as-tonished by his actions, which they described as out of character. Palmer said that he had been greatly affected by the debilitating illness and death of M Berthelon, and wept as details were read to the court. However, Mr Justice Collins said that Palmer's dishon-esty had predated his friend's death."Your business was in difficulties and not only did you have a business which needed shoring up but also you had a lifestyle which you wanted to maintain and I am sure that is how the dishonesty arose," he said The court was told that Palmer, who shared his home with M Berthelon for several years until the Frenchman's death, was a lover of fine wine and had diverted 18 cases worth £6,000 from the estate of Mr Roberts's estate to his own cellar at his Gloucestershire farmhouse. Palmer, who was also formerly the owner of a luxurious home in Central London, considered himself to be a connoisseur of art. But he enjoyed his status mostly as a pillar of the community, serving as a mem-ber of his parochial church council in Gloucestershire.

He was a friend of Michael Marshall, the Assistant Bishop of London, who said that he was "devastated" by the disclosure of Palmer's dishonesty. The solicitor also enjoyed his role as chairman of the Peckham Settlement, a southeast London charity for the poor.

BALKANS WAR: NATO BRIEFING

Nato's modern warfare secrets are revealed

NATO has made up for five days of confusion and obfuscation by providing what must be the most detailed explanation ever given of how an air raid in a modern battlefield environment is carried out

Admitting for the first time that there were two separate airstrikes on April 14, and not the single laser-guided bomb claimed by Nato last week. Brigadier-General Daniel Leaf, commander of the air wing at Aviano air base in Italy, made it clear that the attacks on two targets northwest and southeast of the Kosovo town of Dakovica, occurred only after an extraordinary series of checks and counterchecks, and that a total of 13 manned and one unmanned aircraft were involved.

The complexity of the operation makes it more dificult to understand why Nato did not come clean on the day of the bombing. Although there were many details needing to be clarified. Aviano airbase would have known immediately that there had been a multiple sortie involved

Nato had a specially converted airborne command and control aircraft operating in the region which had been responsMichael Evans reports on the

It had received all the information, issued orders to incoming bombers, and finally approved the decision to call off the strikes, once it had been finally confirmed that the targets being hit were not ex-clusively military.

While a full investigation was clearly needed - and General Leaf said he had had to interview every pilot — the deci-sion to issue an interim statement, effectively owning up to only one hit and one target. caused confusion because it did not answer any of the obvious questions.

There remain a number of unanswered questions, but after General Leaf's comprepened on April 14, the focus of attention can now switch to the Serbs. Were Serb aircraft involved in strafing the convoy to make the Nato bombing look worse than it was?

Did the Serbs drop grenades from helicopters, as suggested by the American general, or hit the convoy with cluster bombs? It seems likely that in the 24 hours the Serbs had to create a different scenario before the Western journalists arrived on a guided tour, they probably removed all evidence of military vehicles from the scene, especially those damaged or destroyed by the Nato bombing.

The problem for Nato is that after initially making the mis-take of trying to limit the public relations damage by accepting responsibility for only one attack, the Serbs will now be in a stronger position to ex-ploit the alliance U-turn.

Nevertheless, a number of key facts emerged from yesterday's briefing, the most impor-tant of which was that the Nato aircraft operating as "forward air controllers" became convinced that they had struck lucky and had come across a major Serb military convoy. Their belief was backed up by

Over a period of 39 minutes. nine Nato aircraft were sent in to attack the convoy, although not all the planes, the Jaguars among them, succeeded in dropping their laser-guided bombs. Seven bombs were dropped.

Serbs' Nato tape is 'pure Hollywood'

FROM TOM WALKER IN BELGRADE

MILITARY analysts yesterday ridiculed what they called "Top Gun", tapes played on Serbian state television that were said to be intercepted radio messages between Nato pilots in Kosovo and airborne command centres on Awacs surveillance planes.

Television and newspapers gave prominence to the crackly recordings, one of which fea-tured an Fló pilot, uncertain of whether he was looking at refugees or military vehicles, being told to attack nonetheless, and another that captured a Nato pilot's mayday

Experts with the Jane's Defence organisation said it was plausible that the Yugoslav Army had the technology to listen to the cockpit conversations of Nato pilots. But after hearing details of the two tapes they dismissed them.

Nick Cook, aviation editor of Jane's Defence Weekly, described the longer recording on Serbian television, purportedly of a hesitant F16 pilot involved in last week's disastrous Nato attack on a refugee convoy in southern Kosovo, as "pure Top Gun, borrowed straight from Hollywood".

The transcript of the tapes was published in the pro-Milosevic paper, Vecernje Novosti, which like most Serbian media is seeking to enbarrass Nato in this, the alliance's 50th anniversary week.
In a city feasting on whispers and an ever more colourful rumour mill, it is widely be-and its pilot is receiving orders from an Awacs called "mother" flying high overhead.

Paul Beaver, the Jane's Defence spokesman, said the tape was a "nice try", but that even by American standards it is too theatrical". A pilot himself. he said cockpit messages were more sophisticated, and that the call sign system "was more discreet than that".

With equal scepticism, he had listened to a copy of Ser-bian state television's other F16 conversation, in which the pilot cries excitedly "eject. eject, eject" after his plane has apparently been hit.

Mr Cook said he had heard recordings of pilots' conversations in Bosnia, which were nothing like the Serbian television extracts. He also doubted that the electronic surveillance equipment used to pick up the conversations would have survived this long into the airthat sort of infrastructure would be high on Nato's list of Miroslav Lazanski, defence correspondent with Vecernje Novosti, insisted that he believed the tapes had been provided by reliable military sources. He said the Yugoslav Army used listening devices made by Britain's Marconi, Thomson of France, and Siemens of Germany. Most of it, he admitted, was at least eight

Mr Lazanski said he believed that mobile electronic warfare units had "locked on to an F16 channel", possibly with the help of the Yugoslav Army's own surveillance aircraft. Again, Mr Cook had his doubts. 'This aircraft would have been spotted instantly by Awacs and dispatched as quickly as possible," he said.

Film shows Nato bombing civilians

THE SITE OF THE TWO ATTACKS

Explanation of strike on convoy raises serious questions about ability to identify targets, writes Charles Bremner in Brussels

NATO admitted yesterday that its warplanes bombed the convoy in Kosovo last Wednesday in which the Serbs claimed there were over 60 civilian casualties.

It conceded that civilians were apparently killed in the 50-minute pounding with seven laser-guided bombs, but insisted that the pilots believed they were hitting military vehicles.

In a graphic account that included videos of the bombing, the US Air Force brigadiergeneral in charge of the operation cleared up the mystery over Nato's earlier versions of the incidents. But his explana-tion raised serious questions over Nato's ability to identify nine 500-lb laser-guided bombs had been dropped by F16 fighters on groups of vehicles in two separate areas of southwestern Kosovo, both of which had been shown on Serbian television, said Brigadier Dan Leaf. "It is possible there were civilian casualties at both locations. This is a very complicated scenario and we will nev-er be able to establish all the exact details.

"We cannot prove or disprove any error," said the brig-adier, who commands allied air operations out of Aviano air base in Italy and led the investigation into the incidents.
The world knows that battle of this kind is a complex dynamic environment. We do not claim to be perfect."

The main disclosure from the brigadier, who arrived at Nato headquarters in his olive-green flying suit, was con-firmation that allied aircraft had attacked a big moving convoy southeast of Dakovica.

This was the site reported by Kosovo-Albanian survivors, and where Serb officials showed scenes of carnage to Western journalists last week. Nato officials initially regretted causing civilian deaths there, but then backtracked, offering until yesterday only an account of the other strike, on three vehicles northwest of Da-

Albright isolated on call for oil blockade

BY MICHAEL BINYON AND CHARLES BREMNER

AMERICA and its Nato allies appeared yesterday to be heading for a clash over Washington's call for a naval blockade to cut off Yugoslavia's oil supplies. The Americans are pressing hard for a total embargo. including a possible blockade of Montenegrin ports. But Britain said that this would not be practical or legal because it would not gain United Nations or European Union support. France, which also opposes a blockade, said yesterday that it wanted to block oil supplies by diplomatic means.

Nato reckons that its airstrikes have destroyed 70 per cent of Serbia's oil stocks. Madeleine Albright, the Secretary of State, said at the weekend that America was "taking all kinds of steps to limit the ability of outside powers to deliver oil". She made clear that America would have no qualms in stopping and searching ships heading towards Yugoslavia.

Nato is divided on the issue, however. The sticking point is a lack of authority to close off oil supplies since an earlier UN oil embargo against Belgrade was eased after the end of the Bosnian conflict in 1995. When Nato ambassadors broached the issue last week, the French, Italian and Greek envoys said a blockade would raise legal problems. "We are worried it could widen the conflict," said one French official.

Jamie Shea, the Nato spokesman, noted that oil was the essential fuel needed to run a war, and called on all countries not to take any action to prolong the conflict.

Yugoslavia receives most of its fuel from Russia and lraq mostly overland. Croatia has turned off its oil pipeline, but supplies continue to flow from Hungary, Bulgaria, Romania and other surrounding countries.

Germans try to halt KLA cash

GERMANY'S main credit watchdog is calling on all commercial banks to block accounts used by Kosovo Albanians to finance the activities of the Kosovo Liberation Army.

A document obtained by The Times carries a warning by the Federal Credit Supervisory Agency that Kosovo Albanians are laundering illegally sourced cash through German bank accounts some of which benefit the guerrillas.

But inquiries yesterday showed that bank managers were allowing suspect money to flow southwards to help the war against the Serbs. The small sum paid by The Times yesterday into the account of the "Homeland is Calling" fund -which should have been blocked since February — was accepted without demur by the bank. The account, which channels money to the Kosovo struggle, is active despite the determined efforts of government bank controllers to close it. The quiet acceptance of the fund fits into a more general pattern of sympathy for the Kosovo Liberation Army, allowing the guerrillas to draw on the incomes of 300,000 Kosovans in Germany to stock up on funds and recruit new members. It is illegal to recruit for a foreign army on German soil yet discotheques and clubs are being used to sign up Kosovo volunteers. bus convoys to the Balkan front line as at least 5,000 volunteers have already done. Kosovans who have been accepted for asylum for Germany are not technically allowed to return to Kosovo which is seen as their place of persecution.

The Austrian authorities are tougher than the Germans. They have been sending KLA recruits back to Germany and banning them from Austria for three years. Regional interior ministers in Germany see no major problem.

US puts death toll of ethnic Albanians at 100,000

FROM DAMIAN WHITWORTH IN WASHINGTON

THE Clinton Administration believes Nato has drastically underestimated the number of ethnic Albanians slaughtered by Serbs and that the true figure could be more than 100,000.

David Scheffer, the United States ambassador at large for war crimes issues, said that huge numbers of Albanian men were missing after being separated from their wives and children.

"You're actually looking at the possibility of tens of thousands of Kosovans who not only are at risk, but who may actually have perished by this stage," he said. "We have up-wards of about 100,000 men that we cannot account for. We have no idea where those шеп are поw."

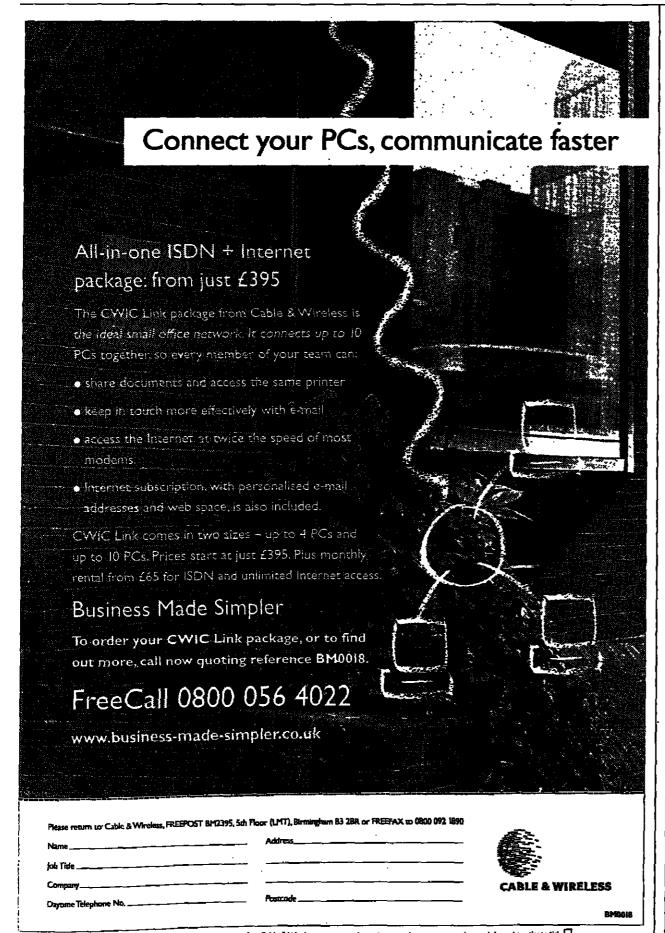

Nato has estimated that 3,200 ethnic Albanians have died as Serb forces drove through Kosovo evicting them from their homes.

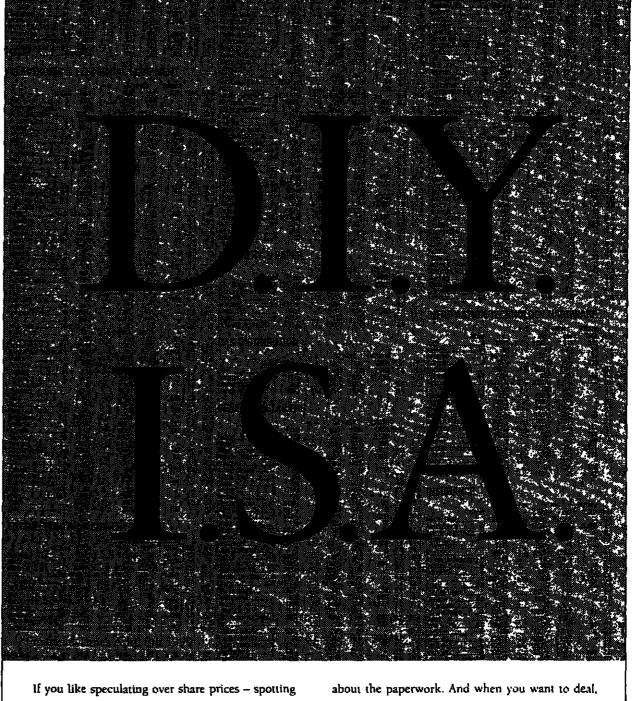

"That is a very low esti-mate," said Mr Scheffer who has based his own estimate on refugee reports and other

He cited surveillance photographs that showed what appeared to be freshly dug mass graves. He called the pictures evidence of "a classic example of ethnic deansing. The Serbs came in, torched the town and then proceeded with massacres of individual groups". Mr Scheffer said President Milosevic was "certainly a prime target for investigation" as a war criminal and had been informed of that in a letter from prosecutor Lou-ise Arbour of the UN War Crimes Tribunal in The Netherlands.

President Clinton, meanwhile, had a 40 minute tele-phone discussion with President Yeltsin yesterday in which he was given an assur-ance that Russia would not become militarily involved in the conflict in the Balkans.

The mood, said Cook's Shadow, Michael Howard, in an impressive Grand Inquisition of a speech, "has darkened". Mrs Dunwoody's worried face and voice showed it.

The administration would be backed by a Nato-led force of some 30,000 men and in the Commons Mr Cook called on Russia to take part in it.

The Government secured eneral backing from MPs for its war stance but the mood was even more sombre and questioning of the ultimate outcome than before.

Mr Cook said: "In the past weeks we have again borne witness to forced deportation by train, to thousands of refugees starving in squalid huddles, to pathetic masses shorn of their homes and their papers for no reason but their ethnic identity

John Morris, the Attorney-General, emerged yesterday as one of the unlikely but central Watson writes). Mr Morris, a survivor not just of the last Labour Government but a ministerial veteran of Harold Wilson's first administration, is required to authorise the RAF's bombing targets. The 67-year-old MP for Aberavon examines proposed targets with Tony Blair, Robin Cook and George Robertson before the jets are given the all-clear. Mr Morris attends meetings of the Defence and Overseas Cabinet Committee, known as

DOP. His role is to ensure that the targets conform to international conventions seeking to players in the wartime chain of command be-protect civilians and parts of the civic infrastructure such as l cide whether roads, bridges and factories are critical to Serb oppression in Kosovo and therefore legitimate fargets. Mr Morris played a similar role in the bombing raids on Irag.

THOUSANDS of schools are being asked to observe a minute's silence next week during assembly in an attempt to help children to understand the horror of war.

The initiative, organised by the charity Save the Children, has the aim of helping youngsters to make sense of the dis turbing images of human suf-fering from Kosovo and other conflicts around the world.

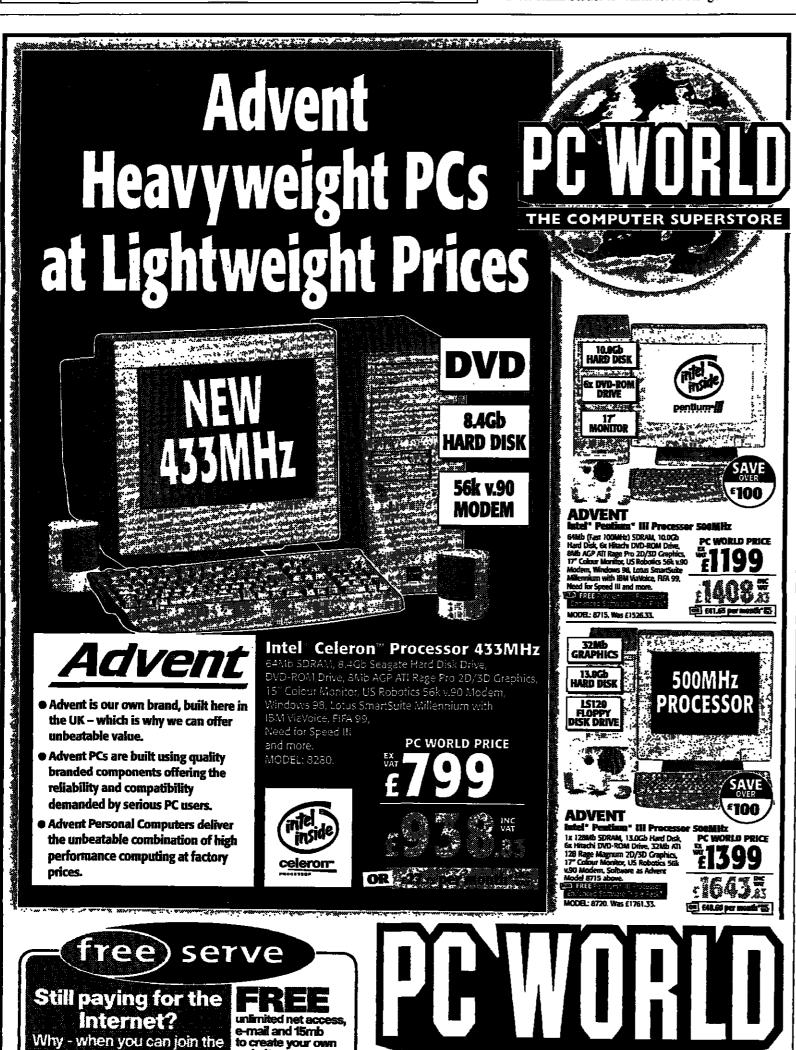

Pupils at secondary schools participating in the scheme will be asked to meditate upon a specially prepared text written from the perspective of a child caught up in war. It says: "I am afraid. I am hungry. I want my mother. I am small, dirty and insignificant, why else would I have been left?"

Children at primary schools will be asked to reflect on the things they enjoy doing most and then imagine what life would be like without them.

The scheme will be backed by a radio advertising campaign based around a rewritten version of a children's nursery rhyme: "Jack and Jill went up the hill to fetch a pail of wa-ter/Jack was snatched by rebel troops and Jill raped shortly after.

Andrew Hutchinson, the charity's head of education, said it was important to help children to understand war in a way that did not distress them. The advent of 24-hour television news meant that it was a subject that few parents felt they could now avoid.

let fascism be reborn, says Cook

continued from facing page in the achievement of any settlement. I think public opinion has been much more robust on this topic than governments have estimated.

Mr Campbell voiced his support for Mr Benn's demand for a Commons vote on the conflict. He also criticised Down-ing Street for "rubbishing" BBC foreign correspondents in Belgrade.

"Mr John Simpson is not a candidate for sainthood but it seems to me to portray a conspicuous lack of confidence in the justice of the cause to be so ultra-sensitive to his broad-casts from Belgrade," he said. "I believe firmly that we should let people make their own judgments."

Gwyneth Dunwoody (Lab. Crewe and Nantwich) expressed the unease which some MPs felt towards the air campaign even though they accepted the essential moral justice of the military action. She said: "Those of us who commit other women's sons to fight on our behalf must be very clear that we are not doing it in the wrong way, in wrong time. I do hope that we will be given the opportunity, if any such thing is even contemplated, to express the views of many of the people of the UK, who knowing the savagery, knowing the viciousness with which politics is frequently progressed within the Balkan states, nevertheless want to know that we are not committing our people to a long term and quite frighten-ing adventure that may not in the final analysis be in the interests of our people."

Nicholas Soames (C, Mid Sussex), a former Defence Minister, gave warning that the use of ground troops was inevitable. But he added that modern world leaders who had not experienced the Second World War should realise airstrikes were often not enough. "The lesson of this is that limited actions get limited results," he said.

Bruce George (Lab, Walsal) South), chairman of the Defence Select Committee, said that Nato was fighting not only in the air, but also on the airwaves and emphasised the importance of a better Nato nedia campaign. He said both the military and civilians should "sing from the same

He also criticised those expressing concerns about the costs of the campaign. "The morality of the cause is such that we should not apply accountants' principles four weeks into a conflict." he said. Alan Clark (C, Kensington and Chelsea), a former Defence Minister, said: "This war is clumsy, wasteful and shambolic I can see neither clearly defined objectives or any measurable way of attaining them. The Prime Minister seems to be making things up as he goes along."

> The lesson of this is that limited actions get limited results?

Mr Clark said he was satisfied that the RAF had not been to blame for recent airstrikes which had caused civilian casualties - but Americans were "another case entirely".

He said the record of the US airforce was "over many years is abominable, whether they are (hitting) Iranian airliners, British servicemen in personnel carriers, bridges, trains, factories and apparently refugee convoys in Yugoslavia". Sir Peter Tapsell (C, Louth and Horncastle) criticised the Nato military action. He said it was the "most incompetent operation that Britain has been involved since the Crimea". He added: "The Prime Minister likes striking moral poses and I do not question his sincerity in all this."

Ann Clywd (Lab, Cynon Valley) appealed to the Government to do something more for the refugees. She said that "every refugee she spoke to, except one, said that they wanted to go back to Kosovo" but she warned MPs that "the reality was that many of those refugees would not return home

Martin Bell (Independent, Tatton) called for clarity of war aims and said that it was foolish now to think that Milosovic could be broken by airstrikes, "Circumstances on the ground can only be altered by boots on the ground," he said. He also complained about the way in which British war reporters, such as John Simpson of the BBC, were being attacked by the Government for alleged bias towards Serbia. He called for an end to "sniper fire from Downing Street.

Mr Bell backed the use of ground forces. "Are we the kind of people who will sit wring our hands and bomb from afar and let this genocide happen? Or are we the kind of people who care enough to take the risks, to create a world which will not only bring peace to the Balkans in the long run but to find the sort of security structures that we have for our own children and grand-children?

Donald Anderson, Labour chairman of the Foreign Affairs Select Committee, claimed the House was overwhelmingly behind the Government. But he warned MPs that the allies must be prepared to accept "less than total victory" over Milosevic. Mr Anderson said the picture was "still very gloomy" in the region, with progress less than had been hoped for.

Blair's promise to retake Kosovo

THE Prime Minister said yesterday that Slobodan Milosevic would be "made to withdraw from Kosovo" (Philip Webster

In a speech to the European Bank for Reconstruction and Development, in London, Tony Blair told the Yugoslav President that an international force would go into Kosovo. The dispossessed refugees will be brought back into possession of that which is rightfully theirs." Mr Blair's restatement of Nato objectives came as ministers underlined that Mr Milosevic's removal from power was not a "war aim". That explicit strategy would be against international law. But they made plain that if he was toppled because of Nato's attack it would be a happy outcome.

Allies travelling long road from Rambouillet

Britain has a history of going to war for objectives that it fails to achieve. After being invaded by Germany in 1914, Belgium was not liberated for more than four years, while the conquest of Poland in 1939 was not really reversed until the end of communist rule 50 vears later.

In Kosovo, Nato launched its air attacks a month ago to prevent a humanitarian disaster. This has clearly not happened, as Michael Howard noted in the Commons. That in no invalidates the Nato military action, but it does require new war aims, which Robin Cook clarified and expanded yesterday. The failure to achieve the immediate goal is largely because the expected spring offensive by the Serbs to drive out the Kos-ovan Albanians has been more rapid and ruthless than expected.

Nato had to act quickly af-ter the final collapse of the peace talks, but its leaders had no clear plan. They underestimated the scale of military action required and overestimated the impact of the bombing.

President Milosevic and his forces are clearly to blame. So despite the damage being done by air attacks, Nato's inability to stop the expulsion of the Kosovan Albanians has fuelled the sense of confusion and uncertainty that was evident among several speakers in the Commons.

Tony Benn's call for the Government's approach to be debated on a substantive Comnons motion was backed by Menzies Campbell and other supporters of the Nato action.

The slaughter and the bombing have naturally altered the war aims. Mr Cook preiterated the terms adopted unanimously by both Nato and the European Union: a ceasefire against the people of kosovo, the withdrawal from Kosovo of Mr Milosevic's forcthe return of all refugees or the original war aims.

and unconditional access for humanitarian relief; and acceptance of an international military force needed to persuade refugees to return. The intention is still that such a force should be Nato led, involving Russian troops.

There are many, deliberate, ambiguities. The Prime Minister has repeatedly said that Mr Milosevic will not have a veto on the deployment of Nato forces. The implication is that while there may not be a full-scale invasion of Kosovo, ground troops es on the ground have been further weakened, thus reducing the risk of sizeable casualties. Mr Cook gave the clearest outline yet of the postwar settlement. The Rambouillet proposals obviously have to be revised, taking into account the presence of the Serb Army in Kosovo. Refugees are hardly likely to be willing to return under those conditions, so we now require full with-

may be committed

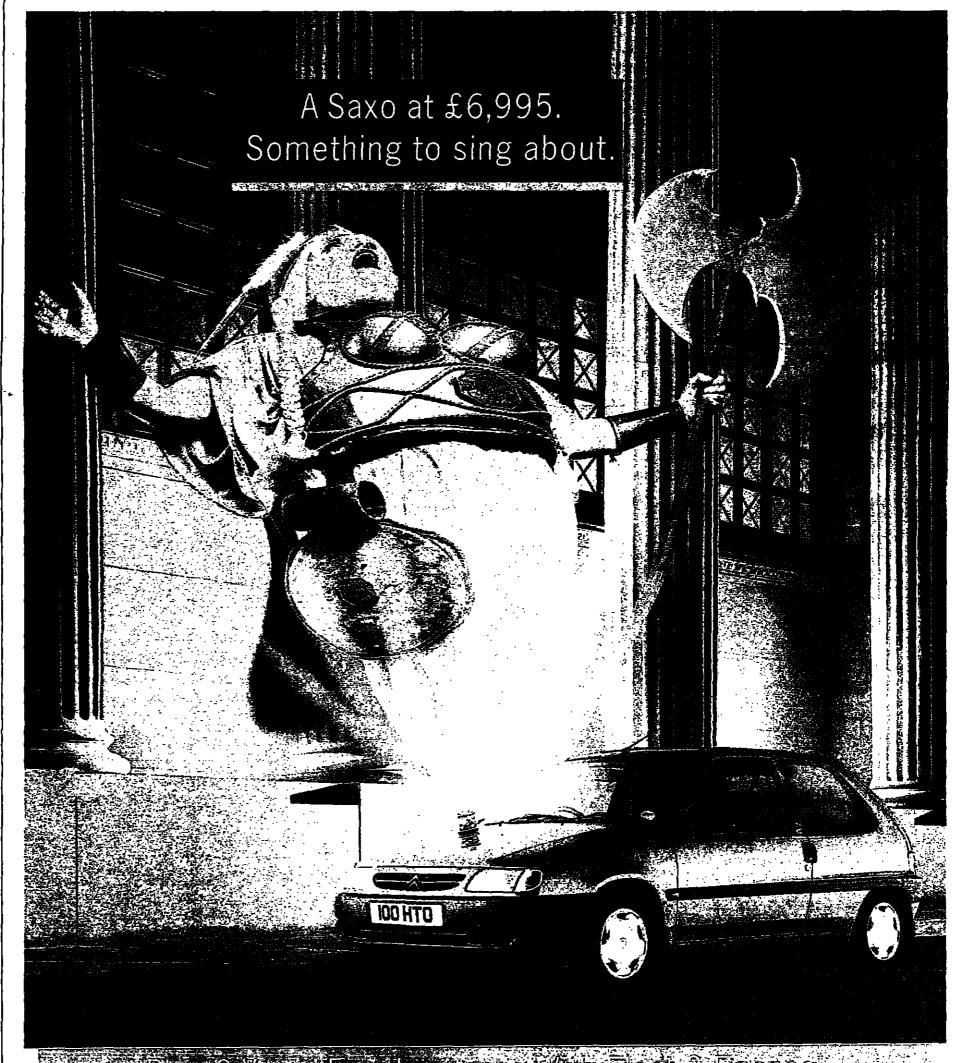

once Serbian force

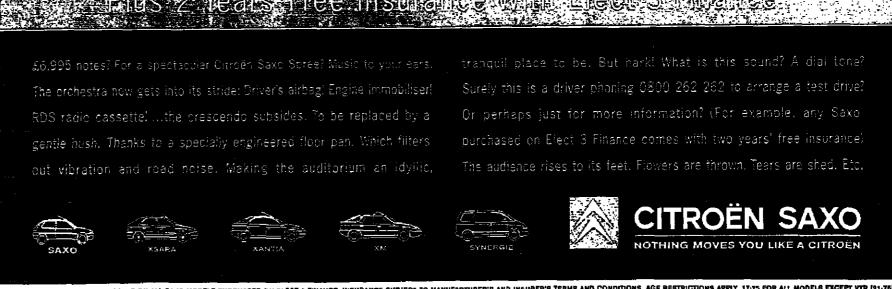

The international community will also have to accept "a more direct responsibility for Kosovo than envisaged at Rambouillet". This will in effect be a separate protectorate administered by international bodies, as advocated by the Liberal Democrats. Mr Cook said that his preference would be for a mandate provided by a United Nations Security drawal of the Serb Army".

Council resolution. This plan has not yet been formally adopted, but there is broad agreement on their thrust among the five key foreign ministers (United States, Britain, Germany, France and Italy) who talk by conference call most evenings.

Nato, and the EU, are now taking responsibility for the future security and political and economic stability of the Balkans. That is a long way from either the Rambouillet terms DOCTORS have stretched a roomy stomach cavity and it a baby's stomach cavity to enable him to receive a bowel and liver transplant from a donor three times his size.

Jack Glass and his twin sister were born ten weeks prematurely in July 1997. He had a bowel disorder, necrotising enterocolitis, which destroys the intestine, and he had to be fed intravenously. This in turn destroyed his liver, but all available donors were too big for him.

His condition began to deteriorate just before Christmas and the surgeon Jean de Ville de Goyet decided to stretch his stomach cavity with a balloon that was filled with water over eight weeks. # BBC fights to subdue unrest over Dyke

Critics say Labour donations may cost Director-General candidate, report Andrew Pierce and Susie Steiner

FORMER governors of the Times. Serving governors re-BBC and senior broadcasters expressed concern last night at the prospect of Greg Dyke, who has donated £50,000 to the Labour Party, becoming the Director-General.

Sir Christopher Bland, the Chairman of the Board of Governors, last night tried to defuse the controversy ignited by disclosures in The Times about the scale of Mr Dyke's donations to Labour. He said the competition for the most powerful job in broadcasting was "genuinely open". The selection process would be rigorous and objective with "no discussion of any candidates with any politicians of any party", he said in a letter to The fused to discuss the merits of Mr Dyke, the multimillionaire Labour member who is Downing Street's preferred candidate, but several former governors openly expressed anxiety.

Dame Jocelyn Barrow, the first black woman governor, said: "Political donations of this magnitude disqualify Greg Dyke from the running. You cannot do this job if you have such a close relationship with one political party and have cemented it with such a large donation.

Other past governors argued that to appoint such an overt supporter of new Labour would be a betrayal of the principles of Lord Reith, the founding father of the corporation. Watson Peat, a Scottish broadcaster who helped to appoint Sir Michael Checkland, predecessor of Sir John Birt. said Mr Dyke's Labour link could cost him dearly. "If there are other candidates who are equally as strong, it will definitely count against him.

"If someone wants to be high profile politically, they should surrender their public appointments."

Baroness James of Holland Park, the writer P.D. James, was also uneasy. "I must say the scale of the donations surprises me," she said.

Mr Dyke was one of a dozen media executives who bankrolled Mr Blair's 1994 leadership campaign to the tune of £72,000. He has paid Labour £50,000 since 1994.

The broadcaster Jonathan Dimbleby warned the BBC to proceed with caution: "It is crucially important that whoever is appointed is not only independent of any political party but is seen to be independent of any political party."

Mr Dyke, chairman of Pearson Television and former chief executive of London Weekend Television, is a paidup member of the Labour Party. He refused to comment yesterday.

He is a close friend of the BBC chairman. He and Sir Christopher were colleagues at LWT. Sir Christopher, a Tory, encouraged Mr Dyke to allow his name to go forward

The Times contacted 11 of the 12 serving governors, but only four returned telephone calls. Tony Young, who joined last July, refused to comment on Mr Dyke's credentials. Mr Young, a leader of the Communication Workers' Union, said: "It would be more than my appointment was worth." Roger Jones, the governor for Wales, who is chairman of the Institute of Directors in the Principality, declined to comment saying: "I don't know who the candidates are." Dame Pauline Neville-Jones, former Foreign Office official, insisted that the governors, and not the Government would make the choice. "The Reithian principles are extremely important to the BBC and remain valid. We all treasure the independence of the board of governors," she said. But Sir Graham Hills, the former Scottish governor and education adviser to the Government, said: "It flies in the face of Lord Reith. The Director-General must be impartial. disinterested, and seen to be so. It must be an appointment in the true tradition of Reith. "In this modern age it is difficult to find a candidate whose hands have not been muddied But it is not an insurmountable problem. There are perfectly good internal candidates."

Liberal and Conservative MPs have criticised the emergence of Mr Dyke as favourite for the £377,000-a-year post. Martin Bell, the Independent MP and former BBC foreign correspondent, said that the £50,000 donation disclosed in The Times should mean automatic disqualification.

There was support for Mr Dyke from Lord Barnett, a former vice-chairman of the BBC, who was Chief Secretary to the Treasury in the last Labour Government amount of money Greg Dyke may or may not have given to the Labour Party should not have any effect on his application. It is whether he can do the job or not. I do not know enough about the candidates to know whether I would support him," he said. Margaret Spurr, a governor until last September, said: "We have all got political views which do not have to cloud our heard yesterday. Jean Shorland, a consultant paediatrician at Rotherham General District Hospital, instructed Vivian Michel, the registrar who administered the morphine, not to mention the overdose on the death certificate of Louise Wood, a twin, and he complied.

Yesterday, Dr Shorland and Dr Michel faced charges of professional misconduct along-side another colleague, Hilary Evans, a junior doctor who put a decimal point in the wrong place and miscalculated the fatal dosage at 15 milligrams instead of 0.15mg.

All three doctors denied the charge. Dr Shorland, who has heart problems and suffers from stress, did not appear before the council's Professional Conduct Committee.

She was also criticised for displaying little compassion when she informed Louise's parents, Brian Purshouse, 37, a machinist and his wife Linda, 38, about Louise's death. and for waiting two days be fore informing the coroner.

The committee heard that Louise and her twin sister Natalie were born on September 30, 1995, seven weeks prema-turely. The following day, as Louise began suffering breathing problems, Dr Michel decided to insert a chest drain.

Dr Evans calculated how much morphine was needed to sedate Louise on a scrap of paper. But, after putting the deci-mal point in the wrong place, gave Dr Michel two syringes containing 15mg of the drug instead of 0.15. Dr Evans, 29, admitted she should have known the dosage was excessive.

Dr Michel, the consultant paediarrician, admitted unwiltingly administering an excesive dose of morphine and certifying the cause of death as

Lost war memorial found in junk shop

By Russell Jenkins

OLD boys from the school attended by Sir Paul Mc-Cartney are aghast to have found its war memorials languishing in a council basement and a junk shop.

They had been told the memorials would be saved when the Liverpool Institute High School for Boys became the Liverpool Institute for Performing Arts. thanks to the star's fortune. Major David Evans found the Great War memorial in a "filthy state" at Liverpool education authority's offices. The tribute to the Second World War dead was among bric-à-brac in a second-hand furniture shop.

Sir Paul's spokesman said it was not the sort of thing he would want to happen: "He would want to preserve the building." Liver-pool City Council said it was concerned and would investigate.

LEADERS of Britain's Jewish community will unveil plans by the architect Daniel Liebeskind this week for a national Holocaust museum.

They hope the Shoah Centre will record the experiences of individuals, families and communities caught up in the Nazi genocide and relate them to the oppression of minorities today.

The building a typically striking composition of shattered fragments by the architect, is to be built beside the Manchester Ship Canal, in Trafford. It is designed to complement its neighbours, the Imperial War Museum of the North, a spectacular concept building also designed by Mr Liebeskind, and the LowTy Centre. Mr Liebeskind, one of Eu-

Viagra earns Dome place as best of British

By Mark Henderson

VIAGRA has won a place as one of the brightest British innovations of the 1990s. The blue pill that is said to have transformed the lives of impotent men around the world was declared an official Millennium Product for display at Greenwich yesterday.

The announcement came from Stephen Byers, the Trade and Industry Secretary, whose Cabinet colleague Frank Dobson, the Health Secretary, plans to limit the availability of the drug on the NHS.

Viagra is likely to find its way into the Body Zone, though it has yet to be decided in what part of the 90ft, genitalia-free, sculpture of a couple embrac-ing it should be displayed.

While much of the Body ean ire a ticipation, the Viagra exhibit is thought unlikely to be interactive. Nor is it known whether it could be shown alongside another Millennium Product. the ultra-thin condom.

Viagra is made by the American pharmaceutical company Pfizer, but qualifies for Millennium Product status because it was largely developed by British scientists at the firm's laboratory in Sandwich, Kent. Andy Burrows, of Pfizer, said that the drug was a "major breakthrough" and deserved its best-of-British tag. It was "a slight irony" that the pills were not yet fully available on the NHS, he said.

Millennium Products will be be scattered throughout the Dome when it opens next year. Items chosen by the Design Council include a waterless urinal, the Ford Focus car. an aqualung that lasts 100 times longer than conventional models and a landmine clearance system.

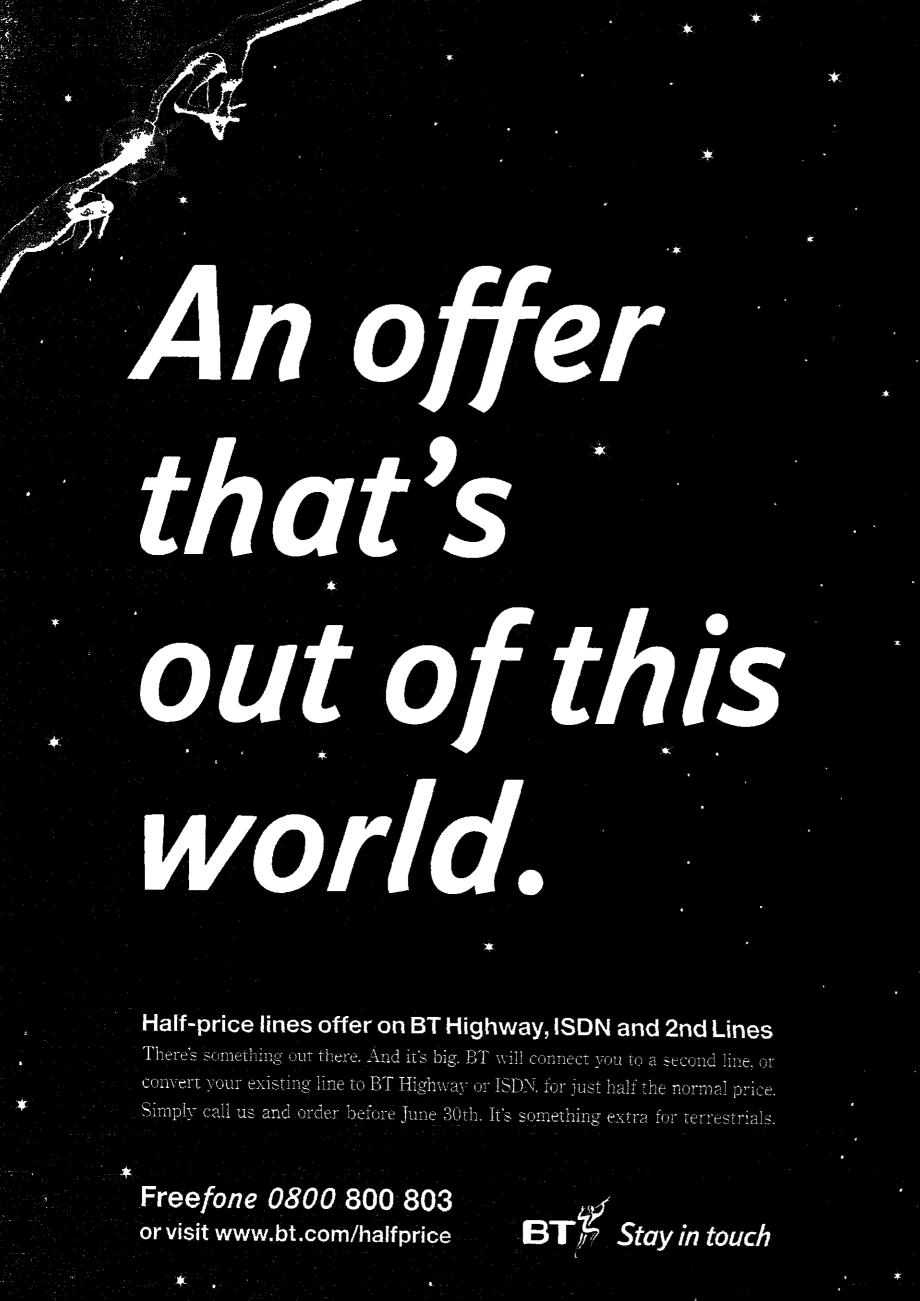

Younger visitors to the Greenwich exhibition will also be able to enjoy the antics of the Teletubbies, who won Millennium Product status as one of Britain's most successful entertainment exports.

Millennium Experience Company said: "We believe that people will find a visit to the Dome uplifting enough without Viagra. But Viagra is expected to be featured some time during the year 2000."

THE toddler who had a 4in nail removed from his brain after the Brixton market bombing in South London was extremely lucky to have suffered only superficial injuries, the surgeon who oversaw his operation said yesterday.

Relative tells of hanging of euthanasia GP's care

By TIM JONES

A DOCTOR accused of murdering an elderly and bedrid-den cancer sufferer was described by the dead man's son-in-law yesterday as "a remarkably good doctor".

Speaking in hushed tones and wiping tears from his eyes, Anthony Ryan, 66, told Newcastle Crown Court that his father-in-law, George Liddell, 85, had been in acute pain before David Moor injected him with a massive dose of diamorphine in July 1997. Mr Ryan said that, when he tried to arrange the pillows on Mr Liddell's bed, he had screamed in pain. "When I eased him forward he started to cry. It was a long and protracted cry and this was more than I could stand. I have never heard anything like it."

Mr Ryan, who now lives in Ireland, said that Dr Moor 52, who denies murdering Mr Liddell, was kind and caring. Over the years, Mr Ryan told the court, he had lost two wives to cancer and Dr Moor had always been extremely supportive.

The doctor, from Stamfordham. Northumberland. was arrested after publicly airing his views on euthanasia. The trial continues.

Union blow for SNP

Trade unions delivered a body blow to the Scottish National Party by attacking moves for independence as "divisive policies which foster prejudice and racism". Delegates at the Scottish TUC in Glasgow backed the motion from the Fire Brigades Union rejecting independence by ten to one. Alex Salmond, the SNP leader, said that the unions had been pressed into submission by the Labour Party.

Brown accused

Gordon Brown was accused by the SNP of "kindergarten economics" after he said that 367,000 Scottish jobs would be put at risk by independence. The Chancellor told businessmen during a breakfast in Glasgow that one in five jobs and half of Scotland's export market, worth £20 billion, were dependent on the United Kingdom.

Tories' leader revels in the uphill battle

By Jason Allardyce and Magnus Linklater

OTHER parties have their campaign battle buses. The rebranded Scottish Conservatives have a modest "people carrier". It has room for just six people, but then that's six more than the number of MPs the party has in Scotland.

Wrestling with a recalcitrant carseat before setting off for an afternoon's campaigning in Ayrshire is David McLetchie, the Edinburgh lawyer who is seeking to haul the party back from oblivion. This was once described as "the worst job in politics." but leader of the Scottish Tories is in sunny form. He has taken off his jacket and discarded his heather buttonhole: "We only wear it in the mornings, but it keeps the chairman happy."

keeps the chairman happy."
Written off as a faceless also-ran before the campaign began, Mr McLetchie has had a good election. His assured performance in a Channel 4 debate, his good-humoured campaigning style, and the fact that, with finde prospect of power, he has felt able to explore issues with a freedom denied to other party leaders, have given him an edge in an otherwise grim battle.

"I'm enjoying it," Mr McLetchie admits. "I've found my feet fairly quickly. I always knew I could do it, because I have an inner strength. I'm gaining in confidence. People seem to like what I'm doing, and I'm presenting the new face of the Tories."

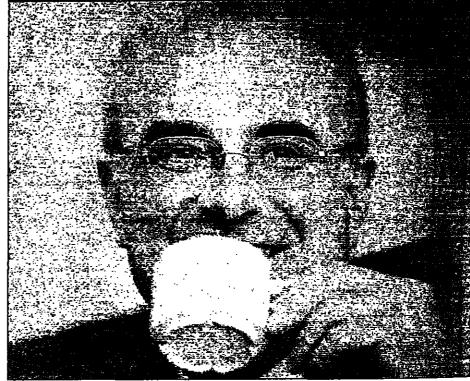

That face is different from anything seen before from a party once vilified in Scotland as uncaringly right-wing. With a manifesto that began by apologising for past mistakes, it has recast itself as distinctively Scottish, embracing and housing well to the left of the London-based Tories. Mr McLetchie has even said that white the Scottish parliament is here for keeps, "the jury is out on the Union"—unheard of sentiments from a Tory. He is unapologetic. The heard of sentiments from a Tory. He is unapologetic. The party had to reinvent itself," he says. "We have complete autonomy on all matters devolved to the parliament. William Hague has made clear that these are our responsibility, not his."

He has announced that he is prepared to do deals with the Labour Party on specific issues, to propose the abolition of university tuition fees, and even to discuss federalism in Britain. "I'm not too prescriptive about it," he says. "People in England have got to make up their minds as to what they want." And though adamantly against senaratism, he admirs

David McLetchie on the campaign trail. His good-humoured style has been praised that there is a financial case to be made for independence.

Judged on economic grounds alone, he says, Scotfand could be viable on its own, adding, however. "I don't see it in purely money terms. If it was measured in purely money terms, you might as well hand the prize to Alex Salmond [the Scottish National Party leader] because there will always be money terms, particularly if oil prices move in a favourable way, where you might be able to say we would be better off.

"History suggests that nationalism can be a dangerous force, but it can also be a creative one," he says. "It depends on the nature of the party delivering it. I do dislike the anti-English mentality that is all too often associated with the Scots — the chip-on-the-shoulder attitude."

Is he not daunted by his task? "If ever I got a bit down, thinking people are complaining about me, well it is only a fraction of what William Hague was getting. He's battling on and I'm battling on. His qualities are coming to the fore and I hope mine are too."

Campaign role for Mandelson

By PHILIP WEBSTER, POLITICAL EDITOR

PETER MANDELSON has been called in to help Labour in its campaign for the Scottish election in a sign of his slowly improving relations with Gordon Brown.

The Chancellor, who is playing a substantial role in Scotland, was happy for the former Industry Secretary, who resigned last December over his loan from Geoffrey Robinson, then Paymaster General, to attend a strategy meeting with Philip Gould, Mr Blair's elections adviser, and Douglas Alexander, a

News of the meeting has emerged as a new book outlines the extent of the recent feud between Mr Brown and Mr Mandelson, two of the founders of new Labour. According to Mandelson the Biography, by Donaldt Macintyre, Mr Blair wrote, to: Mr Mandelson accusing him and Mr Brown of seeming "more desirous of victory over each other" than of trying to make

Microchip solution to animal cruelty

By ELIZABETH JUDGE

PETS should have microchips injected into them so that owners who ill-treat them can be traced and punished, the RSPCA said yesterday.

Although there were more than 3,000 convictions for cruelty to animals last year, a 17.5 per cent rise on the previous year, the perpetrators of some of the worst offences were not punished because they could not be traced, the RSPCA said. Tony Crittenden, Chief Officer of Inspectorate, cited the case of Sylvester the iguana, found wandering in a field in Somerset. Its tail had been severely burnt and it had abseesses and mites and intestinal worms.

Mr Crittenden said: "Such unsolved cases clearly show the need for animals to be microchipped so that pets are permanently linked to their owners. That way, unscrupulous owners who commit such cruel and barbaric acts of violence could be brought to justice."

A microchip the size of a grain of rice is injected into the animal by a veterinary surgeon. It lies under the skin at the back of the neck, giving the animal a permanent means of identification. All RSPCA inspectors and vets have microchip scanners. They can use these to scan a stray animal and if it has a microchip its owners can be traced.

The society has designated this Saturday as National Microchipping Day: pet-owners will be able to take their dogs and cats to local centres to have them microchipped at a reduced price. "Our inspectors work tirelessly to prevent cruelty but continue to see an increase in the number of animals found abused and living in appalling conditions," Mr Crittenden said.

Dogs remained the most common victims of cruelty, and convictions increased last year.
One case highlighted was that of Libby and Lulu, two greyhound puppies left to starve for at least four weeks in an outside kennel in Blackpool. Their owner was banned from keeping dogs for three years. Convictions for cruelty to cats also rose, from 294 in 1997 to 318 last year.

Pill's all-clear | Messing about for cancer may be flawed

By IAN MURRAY, MEDICAL CORRESPONDENT

RESEARCH that ruled out a venting unwanted pregnanlink between breast cancer and the Pill may be flawed, according to a leading expert. He fears that as many as one in 18 women on the Pill face a breast cancer diagnosis before they reach 50.

Doubts about the safety of the oral contraceptive seemed to be ended in January with the publication of a 25-year study of 46,000 women that found that the tiny extra risk of heart disease or breast cancer vanished within ten years.

Klim McPherson, of the cancer and public health unit at the London School of Hygiene and Tropical Medicine, fears this reassurance "may be seriously misplaced". He writes in the Journal of Epidemiology and Community Health today that the uncertainty arises from a change in the Pill's use.

Professor McPherson says that the women in the study were recruited in 1968, when it was difficult to obtain the Pill while unmarried. So most of them were married or in longterm relationships. This contrasts with today, when "longterm use by young, unmarried women is completely normal. [in 1968] the Pill was used largely for family spacing, now it is used largely for pre-

A study in 1990 also found a higher incidence of the disease among people living along the estuaries, but the new research shows the relative risk is twice that reported before. The 1990 study blamed heavy metals and radioactive research news on breast cancer substances found in estuarine silt. But the authors of the new report say that the level of maritime activity might be to blame since more people living round estuaries are likely to be working in boatyards or sailing, thus coming into frequent contact with the potentially dangerous substances. Paul Gelder, deputy editor of Yachting Monthly, said marine paints and solvents all carried warnings about the dangers of skin contact. "I have had a boat for 15 years but this is the first time I have heard of any link between leukaemia and paints." Professor Nicholas Day, one of the report's authors, said: The message is that do-it-yourself boat people need to be a lot more careful because they are using a range of chemicals that they don't understand. Organic solvents are at least as powerful as radioactivity and can cause cancers.

"Our study shows that the incidence of leukaemia round estuaries is double the normal rate. Our conclusion that messing about with boats is more dangerous is pretty speculative for a very rare disease, but the wise thing is for people doing this kind of thing to be

A SENIOR officer dismissed from the Army after an adulterous affair with a high-ranking Wren whose career was unaffected is a victim of sexual discrimination and double standards, an employment tribunal was told yesterday.

The hearing into the sacking of Lieutenant-Colonel Keith Pople. 42, was told that the Royal Navy adopted a more levient approach than the Army to social misconduct. Mr Pople and the 34-year-old Wren, who cannot be named, had a three-year affair after meeting at the Ministry of Defence.

Details of the affair emerged at a court martial last year when Mr Pople, officer of an Army Air Corps regiment. became one of the highest-ranking officers to appear before a military court. Mr Pople, who was sacked despite being acquitted of scandalous conduct or conduct to the prejudice of good order and military discipline, will learn today whether he can proceed with his claim for sexual discrimination and damages in the region of £500,000. John Mackenzie for Mr Pople, told the tribunal at Southampton that his client, whose 20-year career ended in February, had been treated more to be a discipilinary offence.

Ministry of Defence rejects the claim.

Colonel Stephen Andrews, head of

Ruth Downing, for the Defence Secretary, said that the tribunal should not make any comparison of the services' respective disciplinary codes. The tribunal continues.

Most commentators assumed it would be Bulent Ecevit, the outgoing Prime Minister, who would receive credit for the capture of Mr Ocalan in Kenya last Febru-ary. His Democratic Left Party, itself deeply critical of Turkey's treatment by the European Union, did emerge as the overall winner with 22 per cent of the vote. Mr Ecevit handed his resignation yesterday to President Demirel but is expected to stay on as caretaker. Although he will almost certainly be given the mandate to form a government, with only 131 deputies in the 550-seat parliament, this will mean finding not just one but two coali-

When Capitol kept its mouth shut

THE remains of a 19th-century bordello once frequented by American politicians, lobbyists and powerbrokers, have been uncovered only yards from Capitol Hill. The discovery is a testament to Washington's pre-Monica Lewinsky sexual morality.

Researchers digging on a grassy stretch of The Mall in the shadow of the Capitol have uncovered champagne bottles, gilt china and brickwork on the site of what was once a thriving brothel catering for "men of wealth and distinction".

The three-storey "parlour house", run by the redoubtable Mary Anne Hall, flourished throughout the Civil War and for many years afterwards without the slightest hint of scandal. It offered luxurious surroundings, complete discretion and women "noted for their youth, beauty and social refinement. Ms Hall knew how to wield her influsaid Donna Seifert, who has unearthed the remnants of the former brothel. Washington's premier madame also knew how to keep a secret, and precisely which senators, congressmen and other figures used her services has never been

"Unfortunately, we never found her lit-

Mary Hall died in 1886, aged 71. She was buried beneath a large tombstone in the Congressional cemetery and obituarists competed to sing her praises. The Washington Evening Star mourned the passing of a madame who kept her door always open, and her mouth closed.

Before entering the Blue House for an exchange of pleasantries that one Seoul newspaper yesterday billed excitedly as a summit meeting, the Queen and President Kim did a lap of honour around the lawn in the Cadillac, while a band of musicians in medieval dress playing 15th-century trumpets and drums performed an ancient and atonal air that sounded as if it had been lifted from the Sir Harrison Birtwistle songbook.

Queen has seen enough traditional dancing to last several lifetimes. Yesterday afternoon she was offered something entirely different and very Korean - a breathtaking display by 60 children in a school gymnasium of the martial art of taekwondo, in which the principal weapons are the feet.

Midong Elementary School trains the cream of Korean kickers in a sport which its adherents say "not only teaches self-control, the spirit of co--operation and obedience". The word is spreading; the World Taekwondo Federation now has 147 member countries. This year's World Finals are in Canada, and with tackwondo having been demonstrated at the Seoul Olympics in 1998, it will become an official sport at the Games in Sydney next year.

The Queen looked on in amazement, as though wondering whether a bodyguard of such agile youth might be a good way to preserve her own throne for its second millennium.

How to find a path through the pain of divorce

In the first extract from her new book on surviving the break-up of a marriage, Simone E. Katzenberg, a family solicitor, details the seven stages of divorce, from breakdown and shock to acceptance prospect is frightening and you do not know where to turn. The questions are building up, consuming your every waking moment. Or perhaps you are adopting an ostrich-like approach: if you pretend it is not happening, it will go away. You may be between the two: not happy, just finding life dull as you wait for some life-changing event to transport you from the mundane to an exotic, carefree existence. Or you may have met someone else and be one of those people who marches into a solicitor's office and says: "I want it to be quick. I want it to be cheap. I want it to be amicable." It is not that simple. In reality you are lucky if even one of these aims is achieved. The work of the solicitor is only a small part of the process that leads to divorce. The other part, the emotional one, is more difficult — but until both of you have acknowledged and worked through the emotional stages, you will find it impossible to negotiate settlements or to finalise legal proceedings.

emotional stages to divorce that everyone will experience. By being aware of these — and of how difficult they will be you can consider whether there is a way to save a relationship rather than leaving when the going gets tough.

BREAKDOWN The breakdown of a relationship can take months or years. You drift apart, lose interest in each other, are constantly under stress and frequently cannot be bothered to talk to each other. You may stop sleeping together, and intimacy you shared ceases. You may row

'Will I ever see mummy again?' IN RECENT years divorced parents have been denied the MEDICINE emotional comfort of the standard defence — that it was better for a child to grow up CHEST apart from one parent than to live with two quarrelling ones. Within limits, an unhappy

domestic atmosphere, or one chilled by the lack of loving communication between parents, is not, it seems, as damaging for children as being, as they see it, abandoned by one or the other parent and thus deprived of a complete household. At every family occasion the absence of one parent is achingly obvious and highlights a child's deprivation. In any context children don't like being different, and don't like their friends being different.

Children are acutely aware of tensions between parents, and the latter delude themselves if they think that by refraining from throwing plates at each other their problems will not be noticed by observant two and three-year-olds. Snide remarks, meaningful silences and a general lack of easy communication are picked up by children of all ages. They feel the pain felt by their parents and are more likely to become quiet and withdrawn when younger, delinquent when older. Children need both parents rather have kept the family together if it had been possible, that they will continue to see them as much as can be arranged, and above all that the divorce is not their fault and does not express any lack of love for them. These messages must be spelt out simply and often, however banal they may sound when delivered to a sullen, unhappy teenager.

Older children need to be dissuaded from taking sides: to achieve this, parents should save any criticism of their erstwhile mate for confidants. However tearful and upset they may feel, sobbing, shouting and door-banging must remain private indulgences, to be resorted to only when the children are out of the house. When the children are at home the house must, in the interests of reducing lostil ties, become neutral teritory where partisanship and it criminations are not alliwed Parents must also undestand that a child's desire to set the other parent does not the sent disloyalty, but meely a desire to maintain the rest nants of the status que For years after a divorce children will continue to plot and pray for a reconciliation. There is little place for the contents of the medicae des when dealing with the fallow from a divorce but it should be remembered that an emotional crisis of this tort on precipitate a depresive ilness in a child — and denter sion in childhood and adoler cence is much more tompor than is realised and may require medication.

HOW TO TELL THE CHILDREN: they need to know that their parents are divorcing each other, not divorcing themselves from the children

'I love to hear couples say that they've been married for ever'

Solicitor Simone E. Katzenberg on her insights into divorce. Interview by Moira Petty can save their marriage." Mrs Katzenberg believes that all divorcing couples go through the seven emotional stages (breakdown, shock, anger. pain. hatred. grief. acceptance), although not necessarily at the same time or speed. The process can take from two to five years. Being in tune with the clients' and the partners' emotional states helps

They can be so vicious that they do things like cutting the arms off a partner's suit. They confess they've done something terrible, but didn't want to call me because I would have talked them out of it. Some send e-mails to everybody they know listing all the terrible things their partner has done. I had a case where the wife refused to give her husband his belongings. She

There are gender differences. love spreadsheets. I've never had a woman bring one in detailing the finances. I understand if a poor frazzled who's never opened a chequebook empties a binliner of documents in front of me but it's cheaper if you are organised "

In the case of elderly couples married for a long time, Mrs Katzenberg has only ever seen wives ending the marriage. They say: 'I can't any longer"." For others, 40th or 50th birthdays are often a trigger for divorce, as are the children leaving home. Often one partner will have been planning it for five or ten years, while the other will be "whitefaced with shock".

Adultery is a symptom rather than a cause of a bad marriage: 'They're vulnerable, then meet someone who gives them the courage to leave."

Divorced clients can become dependent on the solicitor to whom they pour out their woes. "Some say 'what will I do without you to talk to? I tell them, 'you'll find something else and it won't cost you as much. I'd rather see a settlement and let them enjoy the benefits.

The court is never the place for revenge. I tell clients the best revenge on the partner is to make a new life for themselves and be happy."

Spending her days im-mersed in the worst of marriages does not cast her in gloom. "I never see the happy ones at work so I just love it when I meet couples socially and they tell me how they've ankings of whole univer-sities are useful as a guide to the standing of your chosen place of study, but it is the strength of individual courses that matter most to applicants. Even top universities have their weak points, and generally modest performers have centres of excellence.

The subject tables published over the next two days make those distinctions in 17 academic areas where English teaching assessments have been completed in the past year. Today's cover the arts and social sciences, bringing recog-nition in different subjects to Keele and Kingston as well as Oxford and Cambridge.

Each university is judged on a combination of teaching and re-search and entry grades. The tables weight the three factors to mirror our overall university ranking, so the funding councils' assessments of teaching quality carry a weighting of 25, research grades 1.5, and the average A-level grades of entrants l.

The system recognises the importance to applicants of the teaching ratings, which take into account the strength of the curriculum, student support and guidance. library facilities and quality assurance, as well as the standard of lecturing. Carried out by the Quality Assurance Agency (QAA) on behalf of the three higher education funding councils, each assessment is available on paper or via the QAA's website (http://www.qaa.ac.uk)

Because the assessments are carried out on a rolling programme, some subjects, including high-profile examples such as medicine and biology, are yet to be completed in

Trials of different forms of reporting are taking place in three sub-jects and 21 institutions. John Ran-dall, the QAA's chief executive, said: "There are conflicting pres-sures. It may be the end of the year before we reach agreement."

AMERICAN STUDIES

Keele comes in top in this first-ever ranking for Ameri-can studies, ahead of traditional bastions of the subject such as East Anglia. Both universities score a maximum 24 for their teaching assessment, a feat also matched by Central Lancashire. Birmingham, ranked seventh, sets the highest standards for entry at 27 A-level points. No university in the list scores a 5*, the top grade for the research assessment exer-cise, but Keele, Nottingham and Sussex all do well on 5. Only 13 universities offer

American studies. The Quality Assurance Agency for Higher Education assessors noted that with some providers the small number of first-class degrees was a disappointment. keele avoids being tarred with this brush because a significant part of its success is the high proportion of students achieving good results. In 1997 just short of 10 per cent of finals candidates achieved firsts and more than 60 per cent upper seconds. Mature students scored particularly highly.

DRAMA. DANCE & CINEMATICS

■ Five universities achieved maximum points in the assessment of teaching quality for drama, dance and cinematics. But Warwick's high grading for research and the equivalent of an A and two Bs at A level for every entrant secured top place.

Royal Holloway, the Lon-don University college in Egham, Surrey, could have pipped Warwick as the only department to record a maximum score in the last research assessments. But one dropped point for teaching quality left it in second place. A lack of space for practical activities was the only blemish in an otherwise glowing report.

With an impressive and busy arts centre as the centrepiece of its campus, Warwick is an appropriate winner. The assessors' report on the theatre and performance studies degree said there was a "stimulating learning environment supported by the culture of research and artistic activity in the school and university".

Of the other top scorers in the teaching assessments, Lancaster. Hull and Kent all have high entrance requirements. But Reading's entrants averaged fewer than three Cs at A level. Manchester had the highest A-level score, but in a generally high-scoring teaching assessment, a relatively modest 21 points out of 24 left the university out of the top ten. Glamorgan, in tenth place, was the best-placed new university.

The subjects are increasingly popular, showing increased applications this year. There were already about ten applications to every place, with the ratio for some specialised courses reaching almost 50:1.

HISTORY OF ART

■ Despite missing out on the top research score, University College London was a clear leader in the first ranking for history of art. It was one of three London colleges to achieve a perfect rating for teaching quality.

UCL incorporates the Slade School of Fine Art and there are exchange links with European universities. The assessors described the college's courses as being "at the cut-ting edge of the discipline".

The School of Oriental and African Studies also registered a maximum score for teaching quality and matched UCL for research. Birkbeck College completed the London triumverate but, as a specialist institution for part-time students, does not appear in this guide.

Second-placed Cambridge and Sussex, tenth, were top-rated for research. Edinburgh's students were the best-qualified on entry. Five universities were still to be inspected when the Higher Education Funding Council for England produced its report on the subject: Leeds, Plymouth, Sunderland, Teesside and Thames Valley.

A total of 37 universities and colleges were included in the HEFCE's report and the subject has also been assessed in

AND STRUCTOR

■ Though new universities dominate the list of institutions offering Land & Property Management, Reading and Cambridge put in a good showing at second and third place respectively.

Kingston's lead is helped by its outstanding mark for teaching quality - a standard matched by no other course. It is praised for its rich interdisciplinary approach and for encouraging its students to acquire transferable skills. At the same time, its courses were found to "engage students in group work encouraging effective communication and time management skills, and students are encouraged to apply information technology."

Unfortunately, research is not rated highly at any of the institutions that offer land & property management.

The assessors conclude that almost all institutions provide a good learning environment for students. Typically, courses foster close relations with the profession and 80 per cent of graduates go on to find work within the profession. The early 1990s recession in property and construction caused a fall in the demand for these subjects. As a result, the most popular courses have maintained the size of their intake and the qualifications expected of it, while others have diversified to create a much wider range of opportunity within the field.

There is little to choose hetween the two universities at the top of the table. Ironically, Birmingham loses out because it offers a first degree in the subject, whereas its inclusion in a wider programme at Cambridge means that the A-level score is averaged from the university's teaching and research assessments. Birmingham had the better research record, achieving the only five-star grade for the subjects, but entrance qualifications averaging just over two Bs and a D were well below the Cambridge norm. Middle Eastern and African studies is confined to a select group of mainly traditional universities. None was awarded less than 20 out of 24 points for teaching quality and only at American critics are unsure about Eddie Murphy's role in Life: is this a comedy or a drama? Giles Whittell reports

This time, can Eddie really be serious?

ddie Murphy is such a de-cent fellow. A couple of years ago he was kind enough to stop his Landcruiser at 4.45am on a stretch of Santa Monica Boulevard known for its transvestite prostitutes. He gave "this Hawaiian-looking woman" nothing more suspicious than "a lift", but still had to explain himself to a pair of heartless vice cops and, in due course, the world.

Now, when all we expected of him was to make us giggle for another hour or two, he has delivered something more than comedy: something The Washington Post called "an essay on endurance and dignity" and perhaps even "a tribute to those who came before him". That would be a tribute to the slaves who cleared and planted the American South, apparently.

It's a stretch, but it shows what a terrible time the critics have had trying to pin down Life, a film that announced itself in its trailers as a flat-out commercial farce, but turns out to be a story of two wrongful murder convictions in Mississippi followed by life sentences enlivened by sodomy, forced labour and a shoot-to-kill policy for would-be es-capers. No wonder Life has been compared to Life is Beautiful, Roberto Benigni's "comedy" about the Holocaust.

Murphy arrived in showbiz as a motormouth; the Ben Elton of New York stand-up. Starting in 1982, he took Hollywood by storm with three major hits in as many years - 48 Hours, Trading Places and Beverly Hills Cop. The question hanging over his pampered head ever since has been whether he can recapture the raucous brilliance of inat plue streak, of at least subord nate his ego to it for long enough to make a film. For years the answer seemed to be no; just look at the Beverly Hills Cop sequels. Then came the Good Samaritan drive-by. Few believed it was an "act of kindness" that got him into such trouble with the prostitute, and the question became whether his career would sur-

lenge to his face.

Now the question is more edifying: can we accept Detective Axel Foley as a tragi-comic chronicler of the 20th century using an inmate in a segregated prison camp as his mouthpiece? Apparently so: $8 million a night on Life's opening weekend can't be all wrong.

The film begins with considerable style. Murphy is a light-fingered hoodlum with dreams of owning his own nightclub. A nicely un-derstated Martin Lawrence has landed a bottom-rung bank job and dreams only of security. They blum-der into each other in the kind of swingin' speakeasy that featured heavily in Murphy's 1989 flop, Harlem Nights - but they don't stay ong. I beir chier creatior aubks Lawrence headfirst in a sewer, then sends them off for a load of hooch.

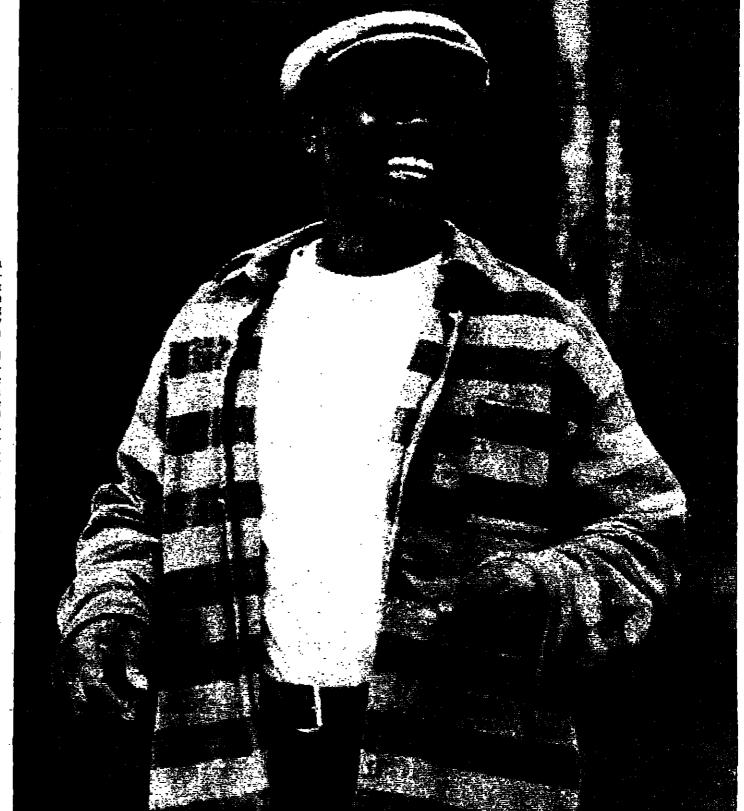

Somewhere south of the Mason-Dixon line our sassy New Yorkers encounter a batch of "whites only" pies in a roadside coffee shop. "Don't you have no negro pies?" asks Lawrence, and a bunch of inbred rednecks with cross eyes and shotguns say "No" as one. It's a funny scene, but also the first sign of Life's awkward two-track agenda: one track stops at all the jokes, the other reminds you of what one reviewer called "the bad sense it took to be black and in Mississippi circa 1932". Back then, for blacks with attitude, the road to jail ran straight and smooth. In this case the man who keeps it that way is a young white sheriff who frames Murphy and Lawrence for one of his own lynchings (see the humour yer?).

Just as Benigni built a stylised concentration camp for Life is Beautiful, this film's prison takes some liberties with reality. The chain gang sure looks miserable, and the big guy who hands out the ritual beatings sure is big. But this is a place where inmates may play baseball if they behave, pardons are a dime a dozen and dorm life can be downright fun, especially when Murphy regales his chums — in a beautiful sequence - with his fantasy of running Ray's Boom Boom Room when he gets out.

There is much that is not quite right with Life. The entire baseball subplot feels contrived and saps the film of tension. There is also a conspicuous lack of belly laughs and, for those who bother with reviews, a hint of affirmative action in their generosity; one has to wonder if the Los Angeles Times would have called this "so gracefully bitter-sweet and balanced" if its leads were comic white losers instead of comic black mes ut the film's harshest critic gets it all wrong. "Life is a lurchingly sentimen-tal prison comedy that's like a setup in search of a punch-line," writes Owen Gleiberman in Entertainment Weekly. "The script is doughnut glaze too." In fact, the central relationship between Murphy and Lawrence is so unsentiyears at a time. A suicide takes place without so much as a cry-cue from the violas, and most other inmates die off simply by vanishing. As for the script, it works by omission, leaving space for the furious extemporising at which Murphy is still unrivalled, even by Robin Williams (who does have a sentimentality problem).

Murphy is ably supported by Lawrence, who has plenty of real-life experience with the law. Once called the Mike Tyson of comedy, he has been accused of sexual harassment and spousal abuse. Here he is the calmer of the two prisoners, but as they age together from 30 to 90 with the help of thick prosthetic make-up the action slows for both of them - and us - and the poignancy does deepen.

Life is not art, but it is entertainment and it's sure to mean the Murphy-Lawrence team returns. When it does, Lawrence should play a Hawaiian-looking woman, Murphy

When Strauss got to play God

ow here's a curiosity, and a curiosity on an epic scale. In 1929 Richard Strauss was commissioned to devise an edition of Idomeneo to celebrate the 150th anniversary of its first performance in 1781. Mozart's great opera seria may be a standard repertory work today, but it was virtually unknown at the time, certainly to the general public. Strauss himself worshipped Mozart, and it was due largely to his passionate advocacy that Cosi fan tutte, in the doghouse throughout the 19th century. was rediscovered. When people refer to the "artist's eye" it is usually in a rather nebulous sense. They are talking about some distinctive vision, emotional content or personal choice. But, in examining the relationship between the painter and his eye as a biological organ linked to the brain, co-ordinated with the hand and the movements it makes. "A lot has been said about ways of seeing," says Dr John Tchalenko, co-ordinator of this project, "but far less has been said about

So how does the artist's way of seeing compare with that of the untrained viewer? Apparently, as Ocean peruses his model, his precisely targeted gaze means he needs only to glance 12 times per minute at his subject, whereas 1 — so 1 learn — will flatter my subject with some 140 looks. Furthermore I process information in the hinder regions of my visual cortex — a giveaway sign that I am only slavishly

But do I need to know this? Isn't it just a dull reduction of art to data? A dry attempt at analysing genius? Tchalenko insists not. "Science will not defeat the mystery of art." he says. But perhaps I have grown too set in my ways to abandon the good old ignoramus's gut response. I didn't see Rembrandt's crepuscular portrait with anything other than reverence. Averbach's delicious impasto still made me want, more than anything, to touch. I remained emotionally indifferent to Andy Warhol. And the gallery attendant's glittery eyes looked just as beautiful on the way out. But don't take my word for it. Pay the exhibition a visit and see for yourself.

RICHARD STRAUSS'S DER ROSENKAVALIER

ALTHOUGH the opera has moments of gravity, verging on tears, Der Rosenkavalier is a comedy. It must never lose the feeling of Viennese farce, with a dash of French boudoir naughtiness. It must also be sung and acted with total conviction - so that while laughing at the characters the audience sympathises with them.

Strauss's librettist, Hugo von Hofmannsthal, stipulated that the title-role should be sung by "a shapely wench in men's clothes". Although cast by Strauss for a soprano, over the years this role has often been the province of mezzos, and the change of emphasis lighter voices versus heavier ones — is one of the choices facing record-buyers.
Ochs's crucial aria in Act I, in which he expounds his philosophy of the battle of the sexes, is heavily cut in both versions conducted by Karajan. The earliest of these has the controversial Marschallin of Elisabeth Schwarzkopf — love it or hate it, it's impossible to ignore this famous performance. Karajan's later version (1983) has the most beautifully sung Ochs of all, from Kurt Moll - so it's a great pity that his part is cut.

The most recent version is from EMI, with the Dresden Staatskapelle conducted by Haitink with Kiri Te Kanawa and Anne Sofie von Otter as Marschallin and Octavian. This is in digital sound, and is a smooth, well-tempered performance.

However, for a completely satisfying, authentically Viennese performance, my top recommendation is Sir Georg Solti's recording with the Vienna Philharmonic and the best-matched quartet of soloists: Regine Crespin, Yvonne Minton, Helen Donath and Manfred Jungwirth (Decca 417 493-2, £46.49). This incorporates all the moods that the authors demanded, ranging from "part vaudeville, part ballet" to the bittersweet ending, gradually into a lyrical mood".

Brahms's Piano Concerto . No 1 can be seen as a dialogue between the powerful, public voice of the orchestra and the more poetic tone of the piano, then this Philharmonia Orchestra performance had a well-matched pair of protagoand Andreas Haefliger. Thielemann is a conductor with a penchant for heroism. Haefliger a pianist who can take the massive demands of Brahms in his stride and invest even the biggest moments with majestic lyricism.

At least in this opening movement, the muscular weight Thielemann brought to the music was impressive, and he drew typically warm and responsive playing from the orchestra. But his approach was also one-dimensional: the mood of religious contemplation in the Adagio was not fully reflected, and he was overassertive in the Rondo. Here Haefliger gave the solo part all the air it needed, but Thielemann was simply suffocating. Similarly, Thielemann put a big-orchestra gloss on Schumann's Second Symphony, a work by a composer on the edge of a breakdown rather than a statement of confidence. This account worked best in the elegiac Adagio, but there is surely more lyricism than Thielemann found. Much more enlightening was the free, early-evening concert in the Philharmonia's excellent "Music of Today" series, devoted to the work of the Berlin-based Korean composer Unsuk Chin. Her music is not as well known here as it deserves to be, so it is good that a London Sinfonietta commission is in the pipeline. She is a true original, like her former teacher Ligeti, but her style is perhaps more spontaneous.

Chin's work in electronic music has given her an amazing ear for the possibilities of conventional instruments, and in Fantasie mécanique (receiving its British premiere) the ensemble of trumpet, trombone, piano and percussion is in a state of constant flux. The dark, ruthless vigour of the opening is very different from the brittle episodes that follow, but everything is at once me-chanical and free. Stefan Asbury directed members of the Philharmonia in a performance of dazzling virtuosity.

Akrostichon-Wortspiel for soprano and ensemble is Chin's most widely played score. The wit of the texts, distorted from fairytales, is matched by music of beguiling beauty. Each of the seven movements evokes a different atmosphere, but nothing is as unexpected as the opulence of the scene in which all the lines continuously tumble down. Though Nicole Tibbels was occasionally overpowered, she sang and even whistled her way through the rest of the night. The Bournemouth Symphony Orchestra was at the Anvil concert hall with its conductor laureate, Andrew Litton, and the music was redhot from bar one. First there was Elgar, pouring out his soul in his extraordinary Violin Concerto. Then there was Walton, ferociously forceful in his First Symphony, timpani thumping to wake the dead.

And, far from least, there was Kennedy, the artist formerly known as Nigel, fiddling away in a loose white shirt tied at the waist, a mischievous angel complete with Bach encore and farewell patter. "I have a gift," he told the packed hall, scrutinising the first few rows. "I can tell which people have washed their hair . He pointed. We laughed. Basingstoke

Every bar in some pages of Elgar's score brings a different tempo or expression mark. This can be perilous, but Litton, signalling with giant downbeats, made sure nobody went astray. After two famous recordings and umpteen performances. Kennedy still takes no note for granted, and never lets the needs of the moment sabotage structure or tension. In the third movement's cadenza, time stood still in a wistful reverie; such was the first movement's ardour that its 17 discursive minutes seemed to whip by in five. The second movement was all sweetness and beseeching, crowned by a rapt diminuendo. At the end Kennedy praised orchestra and conductor: a joy to work with, he said. It showed. Litton's feeling for the repertoire was also blazingly clear. Like his fellow Americans Andre Previn and Leonard Slatkin he knows how to go straight to the bones and sinews of mainstream English music. In the symphony the first movement's propulsive rhythms were fiercely punched out: if the movement really mirrors Walton's love life with Baroness Imma Doemberg, as the programme note suggested. I would not want to have been their neighbour. But Litton also embraced the work's plaintive side, and for once made sense of the finale's mood swings between maestoso preening, fu-gal bustling, dark pangs and elation. Throughout the orchestra played with fire, poetry and real commitment. A glorious evening.

Mahler comes good at the last

The most inspired part of Mahler's Seventh Symphony is not, by common consent, the last movement, Common consent no longer extends as far as Birmingham, however. In Symphony Hall a year ago Rattle and the CBSO demonstrated that the Rondo Finale is at least as imaginative as the rest. And now Neeme Jārvi has been to the same hall with the Royal Philharmonic and made an impassioned case for it as the true and unfailingly thrilling climax of the work. From the jubilant drum rolls and horn fanfares at the beginning of the finale, it was clear that the interpretation was being elevated to a new level. If it seemed unlikely that it could be sustained at that pitch of intensity, events proved such doubts to be out of place. At the same time, and even more surprisingly in a way, the allegedly derivative elements seemed to have lost their alien quality: they were phrased and coloured in such a way that they were integrated into a compellingly consistent characterisation.

Another reason why the finale seemed so outstanding was, unfortunately, that the earlier parts of the work had been less convincingly presented. Working on less than adequate rehearsal time - or so it seemed from the string playing — Järvi and the RPO had found little atmosphere or expressive purpose in the opening movement and had made the first Nachtmusik plainly repetitive. It was only in the demonic Scherzo and in the second Nachtmusik that they began to communicate something of Mahler's vision and to create the sinister conditions to which the finale is intended to provide the wholesome daytime answer.

The concert had begun, somewhat unfairly for the soloist perhaps, with Richard Strauss's Oboe Concerto. Though clearly nervous to start with. Christopher Cowie did recover at an early stage and went on to give a performance distinguished by a disarmingly sweet sound and a not too assertive personality.

Heavy-handed view of Sibelius

t is remarkable enough these days when a symhony orchestra plays Haydn at all. But to programme a symphony as early as No 21 in A, a work rarely heard in concert and one that doesn't even bear a nickname (the last two facts are probably not unrelated) takes some courage. Beginning his Sunday LSO concert with this piece, Michael Tilson Thomas made a strong case for it.

It opens, in the old-fashioned church sonata style. with an Adagio, but one that unfolds with quiet intensity. If one was struck by how un-Haydn-like that movement sounded, it was doubtless to do with the tension between the archaism of the style and the modernity of Tilson Thomas's account.

Modern, that is to say, in the sense that it was Romantically conceived and played on modern instruments. Even while this vibrantly expressive interpretation was raising subliminal question marks. I have to admit that I found it extraordinarily beautiful and moving. A similar disjunction of stylistic validity and expressive effect recurred later with Sibelius's Second Symphony. But before that, authenticity of a different kind reared its head in Bartók's Viola Concerto. Written under the shadow of the composer's final illness, the latter was left in sketch form. Tibor Serly's competent but radical completion is only one aspect of the concerto's problematic status, but it cannot be said that Yuri Bash-GERALD LARNER met's ill-prepared reading did BARRY MILLINGTON much to dispel doubts. Quite apart from compromised intonation, his performance seemed unable to engage with even the more inspired passages of the work.

The problem with Tilson

Thomas's Sibelius, on the other hand, is rather the reverse. Where a traditional Sibelian will allow these elemental structures to develop organically, Tilson Thomas likes to mould the clay himself, firmly defining every paragraph. driving ever onward to an overwhelming conclusion. Thus, the first movement was whipped into a lather, suggesting at times the emotionalism of Tchaikovsky's Pathétique. even a Mahlerian angst. At the same time, it was clean, dynamic, very American. With the LSO brass punctuating powerfully but proportionately, the second movement rightly sounded baleful rather than triumphalist. The third, though a tour de force of

The cumulative energy of the finale was no less breathtaking. Even if one's instincts reacted against the contrived dynamism, the relentless interventionism in what should seem a cataclysmic natural process, it was impossible not to be thrilled by the result.

Kythreotis talks to the unlikely foursome who are breathing new life into the old Pajama Game

iven the continuing success of old Broadway musicals dusted down for the English stage in recent years it was inevitable that more would follow. Less predictable was that next up would be The Pajama Game, a piece that is being brought out of retirement for one of its few major revivals since the original production on Broadway in 1954.

Less predictable still is the team assembled for the task: designs are by the leading American abstract artist Frank Stella, choreography by Birmingham Royal Ballet's director David Bintley. musical supervision by the classical saxophone virtuoso John Harle, and direction by Simon Callow. An impressive list of distinguished names - and a rather odd one. in that Stella and Bintley have never worked on a musical be-

The collaboration of such creatively charged individuals implies that a straightforward revival is not on the cards. "No. 'Revival' has Draculean overtones — the walking dead — we've all seen those shows," says Callow, who felt that a relatively virgin ensemble would approach this with an attitude of "what fun" rather than "here we go again". (The show has a novice musical performer, too: the TV presenter Ulrika Jonsson heads a cast that includes performance poet John Hegley and soap-opera star Anita Dobson.)

The idea of involving Stella was as inspired as it was ambitious. There is an almost theatrical dimension to the energetic vitality of his brilliantly coloured. vibrant canvases, and the uninhibited fantasy and fluidity of his work corresponded exactly to the free-wheeling manner of the intended staging. But what was the attraction of this for Stella - one of the major figures in contemporary art whose work, more usually seen in major museum collections, has consistently kept him at the cutting edge of the avant garde for more than 40 years? "I thought about the stage, and what to do within that box to make it come alive," explains Stella. "To create an imagery for the music and the choreography to bounce off, and put something there for the eyes as well as the ears. To find a way to get the box off Stella's bold, eye-grabbing, stylised designs thrilled the composer Richard Adler, the only surviving architect of the original production and musical adviser on this one. "I was absolutely wiped out by what I saw," he says. The concept of Paiama Game in this different style - both visually and musically - is very interesting to me."

The Pajama Game is something of a curiosity: initially a thundering success, it has all but disappeared from both the stage and the public consciousness. Based on Richard Bissell's novel 7½ Cents — about a strike in a pyjama factory, complicated by the boss and the union negotiator falling in love - it was turned down by every major composer and lyricist until Adler and Jerry Ross saw its potential and crafted it into the acclaimed show which won six Tony awards including Best Musical, and launched the careers of two Broadway debutants - the choreographer

Bob Fosse, and Shirley MacLaine, understudying an indisposed Carol Haney. After an equally triumphant run in London and a 1957 film version starring Doris Day, the piece vanished. Yet it contains several fine songs including Hey There, Once a Year Day and Hernando's Hideaway, and one of the great blockbuster numbers of all time. Steam Heat, which is still stop ping the show Fosse on Broadway.

It was one of the last musicals to come out of the tradition of revue and, like others of that genre, it has a vivacious, mad-cap zaniness. "Champagne musicals" Callow calls them, "engendering a state of delirious, idiotic joy". To recapture that spirit the artistic team have created an abstract, almost surreal, ambience for the piece: an expressionistic interpretation of Fifties elements that acknowledges the period without resurrecting it.

It's a world of 1950s music that wouldn't necessarily have been the 1950s music of the Broadway stage," explains Harle, whose work has covered the waterfront from original compositions for concerts, opera, film and theatre to collaborations with Elvis Costello. "We're paying attention to Miles Davis and Gil Evans, and also Duke Ellington, along with a semi-classical approach to some of the orchestrations where there's a sort of Debussyesque abstraction. Not to take it so far out of its roots that it becomes something else, but to give it a bit of panache, an intelligent, contemporary edge."

he choreography also moves away from standard musical routines into a broader range that puts an inventive spin on the dances of the Fifties - jazz, blues. rumba, rock'n'roll. "Taking a style and using it is something I do quite often - it's never authentic, and it isn't meant to be -- it just gives a flavour," says Bintley, who showed an inspired flair for the Broadway/Hollywood idiom in his ballet Nutcracker Sweeties. Bintley, however, was the hardest to hook into the project, wavering between a desire to work with this team and an aversion to the musical convention where, in an apparently representational world, people suddenly and irrationally break into song and dance. Nor was he impressed by the rather

But the possibilities offered by the ab-stract tone (Callow shrewdly likening it to ballet) appealed to Bintley. "It has ref-erence to reality stronger than many other musicals," he says. "But because of the revue nature of the production it won't matter when people stop to sing and dance. And within the dazzling aesnenc of Frank's designs vollte treed from a lot of restrictions." He has yet, however, to reconcile himself to There Once Was A Man, a country-and-western number which he loathes. Cheesy? "Gorgonzola." he groans. Callow defines the song as a kind of post-coital eruption of all-American exuberance. "Post-contal country-and-western," observes Bintley. "It doesn't bear thinking about." The sexual metaphor is not mis-placed. Although Jean Luc Godard described the piece as "the first left-wing operetta", the story is ultimately about sexual rather than industrial relations. "It is no accident," says the director, "that it's set in a pyjama factory."

The wrong man to run the BBC

length, says Anthony Howard

here is no more sensitive post in the entire British power structure than that of Director-General of the BBC. Once appointed, whoever holds the office becomes the guarantor for the Corporation's independence. impartiality and objectivity. He is much more pivotal than the BBC Chairman who. by virtue of being chosen directly by Downing Street, has long been recognised as a creature of the patronage process.
It is also the Director-General who operates as the Editorin-Chief for all the BBC's multifarious output. That re-sponsibility was insisted upon by Sir William Haley when he took over as sole D-G from Robert Foot in 1944. With an unwise single lapse (when Sir Michael Checkland handed over his journalistic and editorial responsibilities to John Birt between 1987 and 1992), it has been the standard practice

The mere suggestion that the Prime Minister and the Culture Secretary should have their favoured candidate to become Sir John Birt's successor is in itself wholly improper — and in days when less lax standards prevailed than at the present time it would immediately have doomed the prospects of any such contend-

Of course, a disqualification of that sort might be thought unfair if the recipient of such high-level support had The absolutely nothing to earn it. clearest But that is hardly the current situation. We know that signal yet the apparent front -runner in the Portof porkland Place stakes comes under starter's orders with barrel some heavy personal and political weights attached to politics

I have never met Greg Dyke, though, at least since the Roland Rat episode with TV-am in 1983, nearly everything I have heard about him has been to his credit. That does not, however, alter the judgment that any selection of him by the BBC Board of Governors over the next month would be not only inappropriate but entirely unacceptable. Broadcasting House and No 10 should always operate on an arm's-length principle: in the firmament of British public life they stand for entirely different interests and their duties should not get confused. One of the great triumphs of the BBC was the way in which - partly thanks to Brendan Bracken, Churchill's enlightened Minister of Information — it avoided that confusion even in the darkest days of the Second World War.

But how is that tradition to be maintained if the next D-G turns out to be not merely a regular contributor to Labour Party funds but also a personal financial backer of the Prime Minister from the moment his leadership campaign was launched almost four years ago?

Those, of course, are perfectly legitimate actions for any citizen in a democracy to take: but they have to be seen as an impediment to holding so supposedly an independent job as running the BBC.

A former Lord Chief Justice. comment@the-times.co.uk

Gordon Hewart, once famous-ly insisted that "justice must not only be done but should also manifestly and undoubtedly be seen to be done". How is anyone going to recognise that as being the case in terms of party balance if the next person in charge at the BBC is not just an active Labour Party supporter but a backer and friend of the Prime Minister?

Admittedly, we may be told man of the BBC is a proclaimed Tory, the insertion of a figure such as Greg Dyke into the higher counsels of the Corporation would be an act of maintaining political balance.

This strikes me as the most suspicious and sinister argument of all. The Government was under no obligation to reappoint Sir Christopher Bland for a second term of office a full two years ahead of his first one running out.

But it pressed ahead cheerfully. It disappointed one of its most prominent film-making supporters. David Puttnam. by failing to back him as vice-chairman. It then had to explain embarrassingly to the publisher, Gail Rebuck, that she was ruled out by reason of her marriage to the Labour Party pollster Philip Gould.

What, one wonders, was the purpose behind all this preliminary clearing of the decks? Had someone already spotted that if no one too high-profile was appointed as vice-chairman (the went to Baroness Young of Old Scone) it would be a lot easier to slot in a politically sympathetic and per-sonally compatible person in the much more influential role of Director-General? Perish the thought. But

The individual Governors now have a formidable responsibility in choosing the next D-G. Sir Christopher, for all his Tory affiliations, is held to be a strong advocate of Mr Dyke. But there is no reason why a chairman should always automatically get his way. Duke Hussey, after all, failed to do so when he originally wanted David Dim-bleby to take the place of Alasdair Milne in 1987. The appointment of Director-General is easily the most important task that can fall to any BBC board. The present board should realise what is at stake and react accordingly. Even if, as one sometimes hears, Greg Dyke is the man most qualified to take that old public service monument of John Reith's forward into the world of digital communications, one insurmountable obstacle still stands in the way of his appointment. It would give the clearest signal yet that in Blair's Britain, pork-barrel polities has finally come into its own. And in case that is thought to be pitching matters a bit strong, just imagine what your feelings would be if you were John Simpson doing a war-reporting job in Belgrade and you suddenly learnt that your next boss was to be not just a declared supporter of the Labour Government, but also a close crony of its leader.

Blue remembered thrills

onight, with due ceremony and a William Hague speech, the Conservative Way Forward group will be looking backwards. Let us hope they keep a firm grip on the handrail in case of dizziness, for the occasion is a dinner to mark the passage of almost 20 years since Margaret Thatcher's first election triumph. You remember: the one when she stood on the steps of No 10 and quoted St Francis: "Where there is discord, may we bring harmony" — this being the first of a series of calls to harmony including "Not for turning!", "No. no. no!", "There is no alternative!" and "Rejoice!".

Well, it is a good moment to look back. The next couple of weeks will be overrun by even more piquant anniversaries, such as new Labour's 2nd birthday and Nato's 50th (apparently celebrations in Washington are being hastily downsized, with a tasteful ruling that lounge suits should replace black tie. Who says they have no shame?). So let us, too, pause and celebrate the gamey flavours of the Thatcher years, as seen from what is just beginning to feel like a safe distance. Or it did. until the Pinochet tea-party set nerves a-twanging once more. How was it, really? Did she change everything, or was it an hallucination? This is not a political analysis. Others do them better. Nor is it a detailed account of how the doctrine of raw market forces rose and fell again (to the point that even Peter Lilley retreated from it vesterday). It is just an attempt to remember the chaotic, fiery, confusing feelings of the Thatcher years.

Because, have no doubt about it, the Thatcher thing was about feelings as much as policies. This was the most emotionally charged leadership we have ever had. People worshipped and loathed her with equal irrationality. While she was on stage nobody else counted: those who call Mr Blair "presidential" forget those Thatcher beams of lighthouse intensity, and how they drained the colour from all around her. He is, in comparison, a modest point if they only study what the Thatcher Governments actually did, although there was plenty. They must understand the feelings: the devoted tears of the last ministerial loyalists, the loopy gallantry of Alan Clark's diary references to "The Lady", and the surges of frighteningly personal hatred for We are just about at a safe enough distance

They must deconstruct not only Spitting Image and the Dear Bill letters from Private Eve., but also the thousands of non-political media moments which got sucked in. There was a period in her second term when it felt as if the whole nation were a sullen teenager trying to escape a domineering mother. Down in the tranquil pastures of Radio 4 talk shows we were repeatedly warned not to let guests indulge in random Thatcher-bashing, and genuinely did our best. But spurts of venom kept breaking through, impelled by an insane Zeitgeist. You would be interviewing an expert on early catheters and he would suddenly veer off into "of course, since Thatcher wrecked the NHS . . . " You would move hastily to a nonagenarian balloonist and ask heartily "Well, Thelma, do you have any other ambitions?", only to hear a quavering voice replying: "Yes, I want to see that wicked woman go before I die." There are reams to be written about policies, and Cabinet colleagues; but the volatile swirling emotion of the day only had one centre. Psychiatrists who had formerly used the question "Who is the PM?" as a test for dementia had to give it up, because by 1985 even the most deparient mented knew the answer. Children growing in the 1980s asked "Can a man be Pry Minister?": Margaret Thatcher transcended gender.

But perhaps we were ready, needy, for such a dominatrix. The Britain of 20 years ago was greyly exhausted from a dark winter of uncollected rubbish and undug graves, and from the months of tedious brinkmanship and pact-making that had kept the Callaghan Government in power. Then this bright, bouffant bully sweeps in - with a majority of only 43 - and starts laying about her, fearless of unions and Europe alike, banging tables, setting down the law, defying ridicule, hectoring the city rioters of 1981 from a set consisting of an elegant Chippendale drum-table and a soft-shaded lamp, and then steaming through the Falklands war with cries of "Rejoice!" and "Failure? The possibility does not exist!" She was lucky there; a short sharp war, a broken Galtieri, and few of us ungrateful enough to point out that in her equally enthusiastic embrace of defence budget cuts her Government had actually sold HMS Invincible to Australia just before-worship and the crazy hate. The world went on changing; we all got PCs, yuppies were born, York Minster was struck by lightning, the miners caved in, and Special Branch raided the BBC's Glasgow offices. And still she was not rattled. The Broadwater Farm riot did not look like dethroning her, nor the Westland affair, nor the torrid business of the "unassailable" Chancellor Lawson; nor did Sir Claus Moser's devastating 1990 speech about how, because of ten years of cuts, "hundreds of thousands of children have educational experiences not worthy of a civilised nation". She fought her own line to the last ditch, knowing she was right, jeering at the European single currency as "cloud cuckoo land", and appearing like an aveng-ing fury behind poor John Sergeant in Paris to dely her challengers.

n the end, history got her. In that winter of 1990 we sat at our kitchen table with a portable television, unable to np ourselves away from the soap-op eratic denouement of these unnerving years. At times, with the lunchtime news on, our relationship with the Tory party felt like living next door to a huge, dysfunctional family squabbling over whether to put Aunt Ada in a home. Once I got so wrapped up that I made an extra cup of tea, and was pushing it across the table towards the screen before I realised that it was an ashen Teddy Taylor I had made it for. The final legacy of her serpent fascination was that the party couldn't bring itself to reward the man who first challenged her, and elected a dull, safe kind chap instead; whereon the nation couldn't bring itself to reject her heir, and therefore gave the dull chap five dull years.

Maybe we needed them. Certainly, when I heard John Major's sober monotone announcing the Gulf War it felt as if a noisy band had marched off over the horizon. And the first time Mrs Thatcher appeared briefly on the news afterwards, more than one of us in the room jumped out of our skins with shock at hearing, once more, that breathy, insistent, hypnotic tone telling us what to think. Hold the handrail tight this evening, chaps. She's not gone yet.

Bayley, who nursed Iris through Alzheimer's, recalls an encounter with Canetti, a "massive, squat saturnine man". "He is the primal power figure. Iris's one-time lover, tyrant, dominator and master. Teacher, too, and inspiration. The Teacher, too, and inspiration. The great, all-knowing Dicher." (This was Bayley's name for the succession of quill twirlers who chased

'Gordon Brown realised things in Scotland were getting out of hand at the weekend. His conclusion: the Union may soon be dead, long live the unions' he brokered a last-minute, old-style deal intended to head off a Jason Allardyce

t may not be his first priority, but if Donald Dewar succeeds in winning the elections to the first Scottish parliament for 300 years, he may not have much time to sip the celebratory champagne before he puts in an order for beer and

The leader of the Scottish Labour Party is just as keen as Tony Blair, in principle, to distance himself from the party's traditional paymasters. But the trade unions have other ideas. And the Iron Chancellor, of all people, has given them grounds for optimism.

Labour may be on course for victory in the May 6 elections to the parliament in Holyrood. But this week the trade union movement in Scotland has flexed its collectivist muscles. And Labour has been forced to accept that it simply cannot afford to antagonise the brothers.

tute start to the campaign. forcing the Scottish National Party on to the back foot over Kosovo and tax. But while Labour's low-tax stance hurt the nationalists, it also discomfited the unions. The General Council of the Scottish TUC declared that "if necessary" the parliament should use the so-called tartan tax to invest in public services. This old Labour sentiment was dangerously close to the nationalist line. And it wasn't just on tax that the brothers were off-mes-

Then came the Private Finance Initiative. The policy, whereby private money is used to fund public works, allows Labour to promise new hospitals and school-building. But at a price.

Although the initials PFI still barely register in most voters' minds, the policy has become a focus of discontent on Labour's

Left. According to the Left's champion in Scotland, the Labour MP John McAllion, the PFI is the means by which the ghost of Tory politics still haunts Scotland after an electoral exorcism in 1997. In practical terms, the unions believe that the use of the PFI will undermined their members' security, by removing their jobs from the public to the private sector.

The issue sparked the first real crisis of the Labour campaign last week, with the resignation from the party of Mark Irvine, one of the most powerful figures in Scotland's biggest union, Unison. He was worried about the "privatisation" of staff pay and conditions and says he can no longer "defend the indefensible". He was joined by Bob Thomson, the treasurer of the Scottish Labour Party and another big Unison name, who argued that sticking with the PFI would demoralise Labour activists and lose the party votes to the SNP. The nationalists dubbed this left-wing revolt "PFI Friday". Their hope that Labour traditionalists would grow restive during an aggressively Blairite campaign seemed to be coming true. Which is why the Blair Government's most aggressive campaigner has swung into action. Gordon Brown realised things were getting out of hand at the weekend. He recognised that the growing tendresse between the trade unions and the SNP threatened another Union — that between England and Scotland. in order to prevent Labour's traditional supporters flirting any further with the separatists, was also enough to prove a point. However much new Labour may resent their influence, the unions have to be appeased when the party is in trouble.

The unions, and their allies on the Left, could prove a thorn in the Labour leadership's side in the Scottish parliament. Difficulties could come not just from people such as John McAllion and Cathy Jamieson, on the far Left, but from any of about 20 likely MSPs. Because Labour is unlikely to win an outright majority in the new parliament. even a handful of rebels could cause chaos. The unions can hold gun to the party's head whenever elections come around; the party's own MSPs can do so whenever a difficult vote arises -and that could be often. Better get the beers in, Donald.

CHANGING GEAR

Blair and Ahern need to stick to the Hillsborough declaration

Sinn Fein and the main loyalist paramilitary organisations may not agree upon much but on two subjects they remain united: none will even initiate the decommissioning of arms and all believe the Good Friday agreement to be in a dire state because of the continued insistence of democratic politicians in the Province that some disarmament must soon take place. According to Gerry Adams the peace process is currently in "free fall". Billy Hutchinson of the Popular Unionist Party has described the Hillsborough declaration issued by Tony Blair and Bertie Ahern as "dead in the water". The clear, if perverse, message is that the terrorists must be allowed to retain their arsenals; if not, then they may be inclined to use them.

All of this will have been depressingly familiar to Mr Blair and Mr Ahern as they conducted yet another round of talks in London yesterday. The two Prime Ministers had hoped that the carefully crafted language deployed in their declaration issued three weeks ago might allow at least one paramilitary faction to engage in what is today described as a "collective act of reconciliation" and that this in turn would bring irresistible pressure to bear upon the rest. This has plainly not happened. There is little evidence that Sinn Fein in particular has made any movement in this direction. Another set of meetings has been scheduled next week. It would be surprising if there were any really dramatic new developments in the intervening days.

This is not to engage in mere fatalism. The Hillsborough declaration, for all its various linguistic contortions, does provide a plausible formula for reviving the Good Friday agreement. Mr Blair and Mr Ahern have rightly insisted that some sacrifice be made by terrorists before their political representatives can take a formal part in the administration of Northern Ireland. Many Ulster Unionists will feel, and with solid reason, that the deposit of weaponry now being asked is almost pathetically modest when compared with the tangible benefits — most notably prisoner releases — that the IRA, UDA and UVF have extracted over the past 12 months. Nonetheless. David Trimble has so far managed to hold a majority of the majority in line.

This will not remain the case if Mr Blair and Mr Ahern dilute their own declaration. The essential task remains for the broadest possible collection of democratic politicians - the two Governments, Mr Trimble, John Hume and Seamus Mallon of the SDLP - to exercise maximum pressure on loyalist and republican paramilitaries alike to accept the declaration and act upon it. That pan-democratic coalition will only be credible and effective if the terrorists are convinced that they cannot obtain any more concessions by playing for time and issuing threats.

This means that Mr Blair and Mr Ahern must be willing, if necessary, to place in suspension or, in the distinctive dialogue of these negotiations, "park" the Good Friday agreement should the IRA hold fast. This in turn would allow Mo Mowlam to place a moratorium on prisoner releases, a move that remains by far the Government's most powerful card if it is only willing to play it. There are without doubt risks in this shift of strategy. The marching season will soon acquire a momentum of its own. A fresh clash at Drumcree beckons while last year's conflict at the same spot remains unresolved. The Rev Ian Paisley and his Democratic Unionist Party have resolved to turn the European Parliament elections into a de facto second referendum on the Good Friday agreement. The temptation for the Government is to stumble on in the hope that the IRA will come to reconsider its position. It will not do so unless obliged to do so. Mr Blair and Mr Ahern need to change gear, not to change their direction.

EAST TIMOR'S AGONY

Indonesia is not delivering on its political promises

Hundreds of East Timorese were yesterday fleeing their capital, Dili, as knife-wielding thugs attacked anyone suspected of supporting independence for the former Portuguese colony. At least 30 people were killed at the weekend. But Indonesian troops made little effort to stop the violence of militias trying to intimidate pro-independence factions. Jakarta has promised autonomy for the troubled province; but its cynical encouragement of loyalists rampaging through the streets must now call into question the Government's sincerity. With thousands of refugees hiding in the mountains. President Habible's negotia tors will have a hard time explaining their policies in New York on Thursday.

The outside world has done little to stop the bloodshed that has darkened the lives of East Timor's 900,000 people for a generation. Invaded by Indonesia months after Portugal set them free in 1975. East Timor been ruled with all the brutality of an oppressive police state. A 15,000-man Army is stationed on the half-island to enforce the diktat of Jakarta, which styles East Timor its 27th province. The Roman Catholic faith of the East Timorese has been aggressively discouraged, their Tetum language banned in favour of Bahasa Indonesia, and their leaders imprisoned. While 100,000 Muslim Indonesians have settled the territory. 200,000 East Timorese have been killed or starved to death.

Since President Suharto was swept away last year by nationwide rioting the new Government has rethought an occupation that is draining its treasury and the goodwill of trading partners. In January Mr Habibie proposed a take-it-or-leave-it solution. The East Timorese will vote in July on whether to accept broad autonomy under Jakarta, abandoning their demands for independence, or to reject it and move towards full independence within a year.

There was dancing in the streets prematurely. Communal violence has escalated, pitting the separatist Timorese against militias backed by Indonesian police and soldiers. On April 6. 2,000 terrified villagers hid in the church at Liquica, west of Dili. The Indonesian police fired teargas at them; as they fled, they were chopped down with swords.

Whether Jakarta is willing to honour its promises remains in doubt. The East Timorese activist Jose Ramos-Horta has accused the Government of keeping the territory short of food to blunt its desire for independence. And there is strong evidence that Jakarta is covertly arming integrationist militias, in the hope of creating a situation so chaotic that the vote has to be postponed or cancelled. Integrationists fear the withdrawal of Jakarta's troops would prompt civil war. East Timor has a fragile economy. It grows little but coffee and has virtually no industry. Half its income comes from Jakarta to pay the wages of 24,000 civil servants.

The plan is still edging forward. On Thursday Ali Alatas, the Foreign Minister, will show the autonomy proposals to Portugal, the UN mediator. If they are approved, UN monitors will arrive in Dili by late May. There must be no delay. By August, after its first democratic elections in 44 years. Indonesia will have a new parliament and President who may backtrack on Mr Habibie's offer. The East Timorese need justice now, before their case is destroyed by violence.

FUNNY BUSINESS

Clowning is for all ages and by many means

Laughter is said to be a gift of the gods, a medicine for the human mind. The clown offers a tonic to a puzzled society. From the bald-headed buffoon of ancient farce to the softened figure of the French Pierrot, this maverick has exerted a timeless power. breaking barriers with his humour, uniting peoples in shared fun. Now, for the first time, a British performer has been elected International Clown of the Year.

Kooky, alias Andy Stevens, is, astonishingly, the first non-American to win the post. He deploys a gently ribbing party routine in which under-sevens are set happily giggling by silly jokes and teasing stunts. Dressed in baggy tartan and an orange wig, he perpetuates the 1860s model of Auguste, a red-nosed prankster whose penchant was to pop up at the most inappropriate moment, spoiling the routines of his pallid-faced partner.

It is easy to see why young children are enchanted. They delight in the practice of lack of respect, in the idea of the adult descended to their level, in the overturning of proprieties so often sent to plague them. But the most stretching clowns trade in universal human emotion, their humour unrestricted by age or culture or belief. Adults by now are wearily accustomed to the safe traditions of slapstick and custard pies. Such japes comply with rather than overturn the conventions of a society. The modern clown should be willing to test the blade of the cutting edge.

This outsider's humour has long hinted at the arts of insurrection, of the bewilderment swelling under society's veneer. "And if I laugh at any mortal thing, his that I may not weep," wrote Byron. Humour awakens bittersweet emotions, sharpening sensitivities to the human predicament, to the pains and absurdities of life.

Earlier this year, when Anton Adassinsky and his Russian clown troupe, Devero, performed in London's Queen Elizabeth Hall, they brought surreal horror as well as silly humour. Slava's Snowshow, currently running in the West End, makes cruel jest of suicide. Such disparities speak more clearly than conventions. Why else did Robert Begnini achieve unprecedented triumph in the Oscars? His juxtaposition of farce and the Holocaust probed precarious sentiments. Any who saw Life is Beautiful. whether they loved it or loathed it, must have sensed that half-thrilling, half-scary. surge of feeling which comes when restraints are dangerously unloosed.

Such works reset in contemporary context the ancient transformative spirit of clowning. They return their viewers to some instinctive sense, opening poignant perceptions on to the plight of man. British clowns should not forget that their role was descended from the Vice character of the medieval mystery plays, a prankster capable of deceiving even the Devil - and at the same time arousing that laughter which is the gift of God.

Kosovo reports

From the President and four Vice-Presidents of the English Centre of International PEN

Sir. Freedom of expression is notoriously one of the first casualties of war. Before Nato bombs began to fall, there was an active and vocal opposition to the tyrannical regime of Slobodan Milosevic with its vile policy of slaughter and ethnic cleansng of the Kosovo Albanians.

Among the Serbian dissidents there were, as usual, writers and other intellectuals who, of course, received little or no encouragement, certainly no practical help, from the countries now bombing them.

It is an unfortunate fact that, as a result of Nato action, the opposition has been silenced, isolated and endangered. Milosevic's supporters have murdered the newspaper editor Slavko Curuvija (report, April 12), and we are informed that all opposition leaders now live in fear of their lives from the regime's murderous gangs.

We wish to draw attention to the plight of these Serbs who are our natural allies and whose position is now so precarious. It may help if Nato concentrated on bombarding Belgrade not with high explosives but with leaflets informing the Serbs of the horrors Milosevic has unleashed in their name, a tactic used with considerable success in the Second World War. It is a disturbing comment on our own attitude to freedom of expression that when John Simpson (letters. April 17) accurately reported the drawing together of many Serbs behind Milosevic as one of the outcomes of the bombing campaign. he was accused of being pro-Serbian. But then, Serbian statements are called propaganda and ours are known as spin. Both terms are depiorable.

If we cannot have peace let us at From Mr Tom Burkard least have truth.

RACHEL BILLINGTON. President. ANTONIA FRASER, RONALD HARWOOD, HAROLD PINTER, JASPER RIDLEY, English Centre of International PEN. 7 Dilke Street, Chelsea SW3 4JE.

From Sir Ludovic Kennedy

Sir. I yield to no one in my admiration for John Simpson, his integrity and courage. But I feel considerable unease at his present assignment, representing as he does the principal broadcasting authority of a country which is at war with the country where he is at present living. He remains there courtesy of the Serbian Government, which is presumably content to let him remain so long as from time to time his reports include items favourable to it, such as its claim that the airstrikes have made little or no impact on government or people, which may or may not be true.

I think that Simpson has been placed in an impossibly ambivalent position, trying to reconcile his hopes that his countrymen risking their lives over Yugoslavia may yet be successful, with "objective" reporting on the situation as viewed by the enemy in Belgrade. This seems to me to be a

Yours etc. LUDOVIC KENNEDY. . Ashdown, Avebury, Wiltshire SN8 1FF.

From Mr Vincent Campbell Sir. It seems remarkable to me that the Government should accuse John Simpson of pro-Serbian bias when every report he gives is prefixed by a comment about reporting restrictions.

Nato, the MoD and the Allied Governments have controlled information and have conducted propaganda every bit as intensively as the Serbs, yet British broadcast journalists have persistently failed to prefix their reporting accordingly. Nato information is presented as fact, and even when visual evidence appears to contradict Nato, as in the cases of the bombed train and now the bombed civilians, British journalists describe such events as confused or uncertain, rather than saying that Nato might actually be lying.

If the Government is indeed trying to pressurise journalists in this way it means only one thing — the war is going worse than anticipated.

We have seen journalists blamed for simply trying to report events in the Falklands and in Vietnam. In the case of Kosovo, however, the clear difference is the extent to which British journalists, with limited access to the war zone, are reliant on Nato sources and yet fail to acknowledge this in their reporting, BBC journalism isn't being overly neutral or sympathetic to the Serbs; it is pro-Nato, and ardently so.

Yours faithfully, VINCENT CAMPBELL (Teaching fellow), Department of Film and Media Studies, University of Stirling FK9 4LA. April 19.

'Bias' and 'spin' in The Chris Woodhead 'conspiracy'

TOM BURKARD,

From Mrs Julie Savage

Sir. I am not a teacher, my children have left school, and I am not a member of any political party, but the reporting of "The Woodhead conspir-acy" (April 14) troubles me insofar as it appears to focus on Chris Woodhead's critics rather than the issues they raise.

It would seem that Mr Woodhead has a particular talent for assessing academic standards and challenging mediocrity and defensiveness. He also has a more formidable leadership role and responsibility to ensure that schools help to equip young people with sound ethical values and a robust moral framework by which they can develop the skills and principles which will enable them to play their part in building and maintaining a healthy society.

He has been judged effective in his job thus far, but this is not sufficient reason for the Secretary of State to seek to dismiss the questions raised by Mr Woodhead's former wife by unpleasant attacks on her motives (report, April 12: Libby Purves, April 13) and by allegations of left-wing political opportunism.

If Mr Woodhead had an affair with a pupil whilst a teacher in the Seventies, it was a serious breach of trust at that time but it is not the issue today. We do, however, need to know whether he is a man of integrity and whether his behaviour now, and that of Mr David Blunkett, reflect the high standards we have a right to expect from the holders of such important and influential roles.

Yours faithfully, JULIE SAVAČE. Newstead, Montrose Terrace, Bridge of Weir. Renfrewshire PAII 3DD.

Sir, David Blunkett deserves full credit for resisting the hypocritical campaign against Chris Woodhead (report, April 17). I seriously doubt that anyone would take notice of quarter-century-old staffroom gossip - or the hearsay of an ex-wife - were it not for the Chief Inspector's success in winning the intellectual and politi-cal debate on educational methods. I suspect what really rankles in the

Sir. As an "experienced political activist" I appear to have been astonishingly naive in allegedly making such frank disclosures to Andrew Pierce about my thoughts and feelings on the Chris Woodhead affair, I seem to make a poor showing as a conspirator.

New D-G for the BBC

From Mr George Fischer

Sir, William Rees-Mogg managed to write about the BBC's future (article, April 12) without uttering the highly unfashionable words public service broadcasting. The idea used to be at the heart of the Corporation. Enabled by the licence fee, the BBC's aim was to be uninfluenced by political and commer-cial pressure while informing, educating and entertaining the public. It was the high degree of resistance to political and commercial pressure that set the BBC apart from other broadcasters and, indeed, the press. Whoever the Governors appoint, the new Director-General will not be able to undo the debilitating combination of half-hearted public service and commercial spirit brought about by ineffectual governors and mediocre director-generals since the late Seven-

Over the past 25 years or so the governors and the senior executives have mistaken management for lead-ership, the size of the Corporation's constituency for its standing and the obsession with the proliferation of the means of distribution for dedication to public service.

Yours faithfully. GEORGE FISCHER. 6c Highland Road. Bromley, Kent BRI 4AD.

From Sir Christopher Bland. Chairman of the BBC Governors

Sir, For the record, the appointment of the Director-General of the BBC (reports, April 17) is the responsibility of the Governors alone. The political independence of the BBC has always been jealously guarded; there has been and will be no discussion of any candidates with any politicians of any

The best man or woman for the job will be appointed by the 12 Governors following a rigorous, careful and objective selection process. The field, which includes internal and external candidates, is genuinely open.

Sand eel fishing

From Dr A. L. Rennie

Sir. You report (April 13) the welcome news that scientists advising the European Commission are to propose a ban — even if only a seasonal one — on sand eel fishing off the northeast coast of Britain, What seems strange to me is that it has taken a threat to seabird populations to bring this about. It is well known that these plankton-eating little fish form a vital source of food for the once vast stocks in the North Sea of the kinds of fish caught for us to eat. The decline in sand eels has directly affected the breeding success of these larger fish.

It is a sad commentary on our priorities that the human populations dependent on fish stocks, measured by the large and rapid decline over recent decades in those engaged in fishing and its ancillary industries and services, are clearly of less importance than the breeding success of the kittiwake - interesting and beautiful as these birds are.

Yours sincerely. A. L. RENNIE, Wellwynd House, South Street, Elie, Fife KY9 IDN. April 13.

Making a packet

From Mr Jeremy Burrows

Sir, I have not the slightest idea how much I pay Britain's richest businessman to make the packaging in which most of the food I buy is wrapped (letter, April 16), but would willingly pay him twice as much not to.

Yours faithfully. JEREMY BURROWS, 8 Dorchester Way, Elstow, Bedford MK42 9FF.

Pedals on the Isis

From Captain Peter Adams

Sir, One must hope that Ben Johnson, president of the Junior Common Room at Magdalen College, Oxford, is not a student of history. His observation on the candy-striped, pedal-powered craft on the Isis (report and photograph, April 15) that "the most common punting customers are Italians, who are not natural sailors" is breathtaking.

Christopher Columbus and Amerigo Vespucci crossed unknown oceans when the English were just able to ship wine up the coast from Bor-

Has Mr Johnson not heard of the great fleets of the maritime republics of Genoa, Venice, Pisa and Amalfi, or the Roman grain ships of 1,000 tons' capacity, so splendid that their masters' staterooms had mosaic floors and were not surpassed in carrying capacity for 1.800 years?

He should beware of sticking a punt pole in the Isis mud while Britain takes delivery of yet another giant cruise ship from Italian yards.

Yours faithfully. P. M. ADAMŠ (Master mariner), 62 Main Street, Lambley, Nottinghamshire NG4 4PP. April 15.

From Mr P. W. B. Semmens

Sir, Of course the "pedalo punts" are unsuitable for use on a river in Oxford. They are predominantly light blue in colour.

Yours faithfully. PETER SEMMENS, Danvers, 21 Springfield Road. Upper Poppleton. York YO26 6JL April 15.

Liverpool's 'lost' war memorial

From Mr Hal Giblin

Sir. When Sir Paul McCartney's (and my) old school, the Liverpool Institute High School, was converted, at great expense, to become the Liverpool Institute for the Performing Arts — Britain's own Fane school — concerned old boys of the school sought assurances from the trustees and the architects that the old school's two war memorials would be incorporated into the reconstruction.

In the event, we were told that financial considerations made this impossible for the time being, but until the situation could be remedied the memorials would be in safe keeping.

It is perhaps surprising, therefore, that two of my friends, Major David Evans and Mr George Donnison. were recently able to "rescue" the school's Second World War memorial by purchasing it for £10 from a second-hand furniture dealer in the city. A bargain, at about 12p a name, the dealer suggested. Apparently, items of this nature are bought to "decorate" restaurants, pubs, etc.

The 83 men recorded on the memorial include a "Dambuster" and a casualty from the D-Day landings as well as flyers, sailors and soldiers buried and commemorated all over

Sincerely. HAL GÍBLIN. 10 Blundell Grove, Hightown, nr Liverpool L38 9EB. 100446.161@compuserve.com

Hollywood wars From Mr David Moles

Sir. While I can't deny that Hollywood produces far too many light-hearted "war" films, and that my countrymen have a sad tendency to be hawkish right up to the point the body bags start coming in. I am amazed at one example cited by Ben Macintyre ("US fulled Hollywood myth of bloodless war", April 7). Rambo has every defect imaginable, but Saving Private Ryan hardly depicts a "bloodless war". Almost every major character is killed, most of them in rather grue-

Loss of contact

From Mr David H. Walton

Sir, Dr A. A. Surgeon-Frame's frustrating experience with Directory Enquiries (letter, April 12) seems to me to be fairly typical of the BT services. It is also expensive when compared with what is on offer in Australia. There they have a free "White Pages" service for anyone connected to the Internet.

You only need to know the surname and roughly the area where the residence or business is located. A list of possibles can be scanned until the correct one is found, or a wider search may be attempted. The service then offers a street map, which goes to the exact spot of the phone number/ address located. Whilst the maps are sometimes a little slow in loading on to the screen the service is very good.

Yours truly, DAVID WALTON. 10 St Guthlac's Close, Crowland, Peterborough PE6 0ES. April 12.

From Mrs Angela Laing

Sir, My own recent contact with Directory Enquiries has led me to believe that devolution has come early to Scotland.

Requiring a number at Eton Col-lege, I made two calls, both of which were answered in Glasgow by gentlemen operators who, between them, produced the following responses: no such name existed: was the college part of a university? Where was Berkshire? No spelling for Eton existed; it must be Eaton.

In desperation I said that this was the rather famous school attended by Prince William - eliciting the response: "Who?" Eventually I was given a number.

The wrong one. Yours faithfully, ANGELA LAING.

From Mr N. J. Inkley

Sir, Insurance has taken on a whole new meaning for me. Through the post has come an offer of healthcare. I am told "... you can even have a free 14-day trial ... (as long as you don't make a claim during the 14 days)". Perhaps that at least deserves a Kitemark for honesty.

WILLI STOPH

Willi Stoph, former Chairman of the Council of Ministers of the German Democratic Republic, died on April 13 aged 84. He was born on July 9, 1914.

wice Chairman of the Council of Ministers (Prime Minister) of the former German Democratic Republic, from 1964 to 1973 and from 1976 to 1989, Willi Stoph served under two General Secretaries of the East German Communist Pary, Walter Ulbricht and Erich Honecker.

10. A

Stoph had come to prominence in the early 1950s as Minister of the Interior, Then, and from 1956, as East Germany's first Minister of Defence, he was credited with building up the country's army to make it one of the most efficient (and most politically reliable) in the Warsaw Paci apart from the Soviet Union itself.

In 1970 when Willy Brandt's Government in West Gerni-

any was trying to improve relations with the GDR as part of its Ostpolitik, Stoph conducted the difficult negotiations from the East German side, leading to the Basic Treaty between the two Germanies in 1972. Brandt found then that Stoph had "very firmly moulded views". Indeed, he was a rigid conservative who, almost to the end of the existence of the GDR as a separate state, was incapable of seeing the writing of popular discontent on the wall. As late as 1988, almost on the eve of the crumbling of the GDR, he summarily dismissed the East German Secretary of State for Churches, Klaus Gysi, when he suggested to the presiding East German Lutheran bishop that a meeting might be able to iron out the Protestant Churches' differences with the State. This mildest form of reasonableness in dealing with potential dissent was anathema to him.

Luckily for Stoph, when the collapse and discrediting of the regime he had served so long came about, the masters of the new united Germany dealt more benignly - or at any rate more indecisively with him and his peers than they had once dealt with their political opponents. In 1993, a trial on charges of manslaughter of the principal leaders of the former East Germany - including Honecker, Stoph and the former secret police chief Erich Mielke - virtually ground to a halt as the defendants were excused on grounds of illness. What had been intended as a show trial which would be the united Germany's final excoriation of the malign spirit of the East German past ended ridiculously, with the three old men getting off with what amounted to scarcely more than a slap on the wrist.

Willi Stoph was born into a Berlin working-class family. After an elementary school education he became an apprentice bricklayer, and like many young men in his milieu he joined first the Communist youth movement and then, in 1931, the Communist Party.

He later claimed that he carried on anti-Nazi activities during the Third Reich, but such claims were largely discounted. During the Second World War he served as an NCO in the Wehrmacht with various artillery regiments. At the end of the war he held a number of important posts in the economic management of the Soviet Zone from 1945 to 1952. He was then appointed Minister of the Interior and played a crucial part in setting up the armed forces of the GDR, disguised as "People's Police in Barracks". However, in 1953 his people's police failed to prevent the popular rising which was subsequently put down by the Soviet Army. But this does not seem to have damaged his standing with the Russians or with

during his time as Minister of Defence, and they proved useful to him later on when he came under pressure from Honecker. There was deep and lasting rivalry between the two men after Honecker emerged as Ulbricht's preferred candidate following Stoph's sudden and unex-plained decline from popularity with Ulbricht.

On the death of Ulbricht in 1973, Honecker, General Secre-tary since 1971, "promoted" Stoph to be Chairman of the Council of State, or head of state, a much less significant position at that time. It began to look as though Stoph's career was drawing to a close. But in 1976, at a time of economic difficulties, he was brought back as head of the government, and in the late faced growing pressure for reform from a peaceful popular uprising, Stoph was ousted from office, along with Honec-ker, on November 7, 1989. Along with a number of other senior Communists, they were subsequently put on trial for the manslaughter of those who had been shot on their orders by border guards while attempting to escape over the Berlin Wall. But the proceedings, which had been intended to be exemplary, ended in near farce. Honecker, who was suffering from terminal cancer, was set free in January 1993 and allowed to go to Chile, where he eventually died: Stoph, who was too ill to attend court, was also released: and Erich Mielke was declared insane. In the end, only two relatively minor officials were sentenced.

ANDREW OSMOND

Andrew Osmond writer and co-founder of Private Eve. died of a brain tumour on April 14. aged 61. He was born on March 16, 1938.

THE death of Andrew Osmond, following those of Peter Cook, Willie Rushton and John Wells, further depletes the ranks of those associated with the founding of the satirical magazine Private Eye. In 1961 Osmond put up the £300 capital needed to launch the project, and although he sold most of his shares nine months later to pursue a career in the Foreign Office, it was by then on its way to becoming a national institution. He was known to a wider public for the thrillers he wrote with his former diplomatic colleague Douglas

Hurd, later Foreign Secretary. The son of a Lincolnshire businessman, who died when he was eight, Andrew Osmond was educated at Harrow and was called up, as one of the last of the National Service generation, into the Rifle Brigade in 1956. At Eaton Hall he won the Sword of Honour, and he was commissioned into the Gurkha Rifles, seeing action in Malaya. He liked to recall the time when, leading his company through the jungle, he called in artillery support to attack enemy positions ahead. By mistake he gave the co-ordinates of his own position, and he and his unit had to endure several minutes of "friendly" shelling.

At Oxford he was close to Richard Ingrams and Paul Foot, contributing to their humorous magazine Parson's Pleasure, and with Peter Usborne he helped to set up Mesopotamia, before heading to Paris to learn French in preparation for a career in the Foreign Office.

In the autumn of 1961, he was summoned back to London by Usborne, Ingrams, Rushton and Christopher Booker, since he was the only person they knew with the £300 they needed to set up a new satirical magazine. Various titles were bandied about, but Osmond insisted on the name Private Eve.

He then played a key part in the launch, using his Mini to drive copies of the early editions round the Kensington coffee bars and restaurants where it was sold. He and Booker, the first editor, also delivered copy to a northwest London suburb to be printed by the then revolutionary photo-litho process, so inspiring the magazine's obsession with Neasden which contin-

Private Eye was selling 13,000 copies a fortnight and had moved from Rushton's bedroom to its first office, in a Covent Garden warehouse. Osmond decided to return to respectability by applying again for the Foreign Office. He sold a controlling share in Private Eye for £1,500 to Peter Cook and Nick Luard, owners of a satirical nightclub, The Establishment, and embarked on his new career. Although he found diplomatic life increasingly irksome, his friendship with a colleague in the Rome Embassy, Douglas Hurd, led them eventually to collaborate on four thrillers, beginning with Send Him Victorious (1968) and ending with War Without Frontiers (1982).

in 1969 Osmond left the Foreign Office and settled down with his American wife, Stuart, and their two young children in an old vicarage near Burford in Oxfordshire, hoping to establish himself as a writer, and meanwhile rejoining Private Eye as parttime business manager. These were golden years, as the couple threw themselves into village life, staging memorable cricketing weekends for the entire Eye staff, and the magazine's circulation soared towards 200,000.

Yet despite his fertile imagination, Osmond found life as a writer a solitary ordeal, and after some trying years the couple returned to London, where in 1985 he joined a firmproviding speeches for businessmen. He later set up a similar firm of his own, Company Writers, but although he tried to remain cheerful, this was scarcely inspiring work for one who should perhaps have been a captain of industry in his own right. Genial and handsome, Ösmond was an unfailingly generous man who spread more light than he

SKIP SPENCE

Skip Spence, singer and uitarist, died of lung cancer in Santa Cruz, California on April 16 aged 52. He was

THE final tragic irony of Skip Spence's troubled life was that he should die within days of the planned release of a tribute album by superstar friends. paying homage to his pioneering role as one of the founders of the 1960s San Francisco "acid rock" sound. Robert Plant, Beck and Tom Waits are among those who gave their services free, and royalties from the album were to have gone to a fund to help Spence to rebuild his life. He had spent his last years living in a trailer park in reduced circumstances after suffering psychiatric problems, drug addiction and alcoholism. Spence was an early member of two seminal groups, Jeffer-son Airplane and Moby Grape. He was an influential figure in the success of both, although his instability meant that he did not stay long with either. He went on to record the 1969 solo album Oar, one of the great lost classics of the psychedelic era. After paranoid schizophrenia was diagnosed, he became regarded as a crazy, wayward talent, a typical casualty of those drug-addled times. Apart from two brief, unsatisfactory Moby Grape regroupings, he was never to make another record after Oar. Alexander Spence was born in Ontario, Canada, but soon moved to California. While still in his teens he emerged as a folk singer in clubs around San José, before joining a local garage band known variously as the Topsiders and the Other Side. In 1965 he answered an advert for a second guitarist to play with the San Francisco band Quicksilver Messenger

Before he could join, however, he was spotted in a club by Marty Balin, who recruited him instead to drum with the newly formed Jefferson Air-plane, even though he had never played percussion be-fore. Balin needed a drummer, so he told Spence to get some sticks and practise. A week later he was appearing with the group on stage at San Francisco's Matrix Club. Spence played on the band's debut album, Jefferson Air-plane Takes Off, and wrote several of the songs, but quit by mutual agreement in May 1966 and headed for Mexico. The band had been alarmed by his erratic behaviour but continued to recognise his worth as a songwriter, recording his My Best Friend for their second album, Surrealistic Pillow, after his departure.

autumn of 1966, Spence joined Moby Grape as guitarist and lead singer. The band signed a lucrative deal with Columbia and looked set to become one of the biggest names in the burgeoning West Coast scene. but in June 1967 Spence and two other band members were charged with "contributing to the delinquency of minors" after being caught with three under-age girls in their car in Marin County. Charges were eventually dropped, but the lurid press reports of drugs, girls and rock stars with their trousers around their ankles were hugely damaging.

Back in the Bay area in the

They were not helped, either, by a hubristic marketing campaign which saw five singles from their first album released on the same day. This backfired and Omaha, the best of them, reached only 88 in the American charts. But first two albums, Moby Grape and Wow (which included a track that had to be played at a different speed), both were fine examples of the psychedelic rock era, with tightly structured, guitar-based songs which have stood time's test. During the recording of Wow. Spence suffered a ner-

despite the hype around their

vous breakdown, and attacked the drummer Don Stevenson with an axe. When he came out of hospital, he made his way to Nashville and recorded Oar, playing all the instruments himself and recording the entire album, legend alleges, in a single day. Its extraordinary songs, some impossibly dark and others sunny and melodic, spoke of his schizophrenic spirit, and although sales were poor, it is a cult classic.

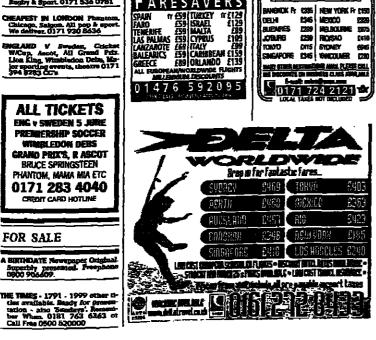

Back on the West Coast, in San José, Spence teamed up with a band called Pud. He suggested they change their name to the Doobie Brothers, but typically did not stick around to share their chart success. He joined a Moby Grape reunion in 1971 for the disappointing album 20 Granite Creek, which included his strange Chinese Song, played on a koto — but by now his problems were crowding in.

Another reunion in 1978 produced a live album, and in 1990 the rest of the original line-up re-formed again and recorded a new Spence song, All My Life, on the album Original Grape, but he was in no state to join them. He was made a ward of California's Santa Cruz County and spent his last years in a residential care hostel and a trailer home. He entered the Dominican Hospital, Santa Cruz, with lung cancer on April 5. He is survived by four children.

MICHAEL MELFORD

MAKES O.B.

JEAN SON

Michael Melford, sports iournalist, died on April 18 aged 82. He was born in St John's Wood, London, on November 9, 1916.

AS THE first cricket and rugby football correspondent of The Sunday Telegraph, from 1961, and then, from 1975 until 1982, as cricket correspondent of The Daily Telegraph. Michael Melford became one of the most respected and best-liked sports writers of his day. The players knew they were assured of a fair deal, and he wrote with a ready wit and a shrewd eye. Michael Austin Melford was a scion of the stage, his father being a founder member of the Co-optimists theatre company, and his mother having been, as Jessie Winter, a well-known actress. Lillie Langtry was one of his god-

mothers. From Charterhouse he went to Christ Church. Oxford, where he studied law and won an athletics Blue as a middle-distance runner. He was a Gunner in the Second World War, serving in Tunisia, Egypt and Italy.

After the war his love and knowledge of sport took him to The Observer from 1946 to 1950, and to The Field as an assistant editor. From 1950, with the Telegraphs, he wrote on cricket, rugby and athletics. He covered two Olympics (Mel-bourne in 1956 and Rome in 1960) and numerous rugby internationals, but he was mostly to be found at the cricket.

Succeeding E. W. Swanton as The Daily Telegraph's chief cricket writer was no easy undertaking, and Melford's style and strengths were very different. Where Swanton had pronounced, Melford proposed. Melford was the gentlest of critics, but when he did take a club the impact registered. Except, perhaps, in the case of South Africa. He was a staunch, not to say stubborn, advocate of maintaining sporting links with the regime there, seeing contact as the most likely means to bring about change.

A lifelong interest in horse racing meant that Melford knew his way around the form-book as well as Wisden. There were few better non-professional handicappers in the country, and he took great delight in having his account closed by a leading bookmaker, who sent him an unreserved apology when they discovered they were dealing not with some sort of conspirator but with a client of caution and the utmost integrity who held on to his hat when he had

£10 on a horse. He had had no more than a moderately successful fortnight, though he had backed a number of less than obvious horses. The story duly circulated in the highest echelons of racing and caused the bookmaker much embarrassment.

When Peter May was looking for an amanuensis to recount his year as England's finest postwar batsman, captain in 41 Test matches and a Test selector, he turned to Melford, who collaborated with him on A Game Enjoyed. Melford's own book, After the Interval, is the best history of first-class cricket between 1946 and 1990. He also wrote a history of the Denham Golf Club, golf being a game that brought him much pleasure. He married Lorna Powell in 1950. She and their two daughters survive him.

WEEK-END WITHOUT A MAID.

Many considerations have changed the character of the Saturday to Monday spent in the country. During the war the difficulties of travelling necessitated "travelling light", if we did it at all. The large and heavy boxes of pre-war days gave way to a small light bag which could be carried by its owner if there were no taxis and porters. This resulted in the weekend wardrobe being reduced to the smallest possible dimensions.

The habit of greater simplicity formed in those days has remained. It is no longer necessary to go away for Sundays with a variety of tea-gowns as well as of evening gowns and with Sunday clothes as distinct from country clothes. The real difficulty in the way of taking away few clothes is found in the variable English climate, for as late as May and June furs may still be required and worn alternately with light summer clothes.

Many people have given up having a maid, and probably the moment when

ON THIS DAY

April 20, 1922

This article from the women's column of the paper catches the flavour of a different social age — when weekends were a time to leave the town for a stay in a country house

she is most missed is during the week-end visit. The problem of the woman who goes away maid-less is the problem of packing. A great deal of extra trouble is entailed. No longer can a few directions be given to a trusty maid as to the things that will be wanted. It is much better to take two very small boxes rather than one big one. In a house where there are no menservants and no lift this is a blessing for the women servants.

leave behind those accumulations of travelling bags, cushions, rugs, and other paraphernalia which are carried by hand and go in the railway carriage with their owner. Where there is no maid to take charge of these, they will be found a heavy incubus, and heaviest of all is the large dressing-case filled with bottles and brushes. The woman travelling alone had better sacrifice this altogether, and be satisfied with a less ornamental dressing-table. A duplica-tion of brushes and bottles for a few days is totally unnecessary, and the few that are really needed can well be packed with other things in the box.

An essential for a week-end visit without a maid is a tiny work-basket with needles, thread, pins, darning material, and so on. The visitor should carefully label her boxes before starting, for the number of railway lines which refuse to take unlabelled luggage is on the increase. If she neglects this precaution she is likely to find herself delayed at the station while a friendly porter produces a label and a stumpy pencil with which The visitor will be well advised to to supply the deficiency...

Kingfisher shares fall over Asda merger nerves

By Sarah Cunningham, retail correspondent

SHARES of Kinglisher, the retail group, fell by more than 5 per cent yesterday after investors became nervous about the impact on its earnings of its proposed merger with Asda. The share price fall saw the value of the combined group drop by nearly El billion from Friday to £16.7 billion.

Kingfisher shares fell 44p to 796p. Continued speculation that Wal-Mart, the US retailer, or a continental European company, might come in with a cash bid for Asda gave some support to the supermarket group's share price. It closed down 5p at

The fall in Kingfisher's price means that the all-paper deal was worth just 180p per Asda share by the end of yes terday. "In effect this should make it easier for a counterbidder with cash to come in,"

Allan Leighton, chief executive, said he had had no indication from Wal-Mart, or any other retailer, as to whether they might come for-ward with a bid. "I haven't got a clue," he said.

He said that it was wrong to interpret the deal as a defensive strike against the possible arrival of Wal-Mart, the world's largest retailer, in the UK. This is an offensive move," he said. "It's a platform for growth."

After a presentation by Sir Geoffrey Mulcahy, chief executive of Kingfisher, and Mr Leighton, the analyst said that while the two companies billed the deal as creating "a world-scale retailer", it was in fact exposing Kingfisher to a mature UK supermarket

Asda said yesterday that its like-for-like sales in the second half to April 10, excluding petrol, were up 4.7 per cent — well above the sector average. Nick Bubb, retail analyst at SG Securities, said: "The market is taking against the idea because of the increasing food exposure. Asda is not on anything like the same valuation as Darty or Castorama [Kingfisher's electricals and DIY businesses in Francel."

Kinglisher estimated the deal, first mooted a year ago, would deliver cost savings of at least £100 million a year and provide a platform to speed up European and international expansion.

The combined group would rank among the top ten global retailers in terms of market capitalisation, and the number one in Europe in terms of operating profits.

The proposed marriage marks further consolidation of Europe's fragmented retail industry, spurred on by the euro as well as retailers' ambitions to succeed on a global scale.

Underscoring the rapidly shifting European retail scene, Germany's Karstadt and Quelle announced plans to merge, creating a group with annual sales of some DM33 billion (Ell billion) that spans store-based retailing, mail or der business, tourism and oth er services.

Sir Geoffrey commented: "People are seeing opportunities to operate more efficiently on a larger scale."

Although Asda and Kingfisher are proposing to make changes, such as putting Asda's George brand of clothing into high street branches of Woolworths, part of the Kingfisher empire, customers are unlikely to see much of this until the end of the year.

Wim Duisenberg said yesterday the "point has not been reached" for ECB intervention on the euro

Euro slides to record low against sterling

By Alasdair Murray, economics correspondent

THE euro slumped to record lows against the pound and the dollar yesterday as the European Central Bank ruled out market intervention and fears grew that the conflict over Kosovo would take a heavy toll of European

Wim Duisenberg told the European Parliament the "point has not been reached" where the ECB felt sufficiently worried about the value of the euro to intervene and, for the moment, it would continue a policy of exchange rate "neglect".

Mr Duisenberg's comments sparkeď a fresh sell-off of the euro, which fell as as $1.0589 against the dollar, before making a modest recovery to hold at $1.0610. The curo also lost further ground against the pound, falling to a record low of 65.60p. Mr Duisenberg refused to state at what levels the ECB might consider intervention, claiming that it would provide an open invitation for speculators to test the Bank's resolve. He added that the crisis in Kosovo was weighing on the currency, although not to "an alarming extent".

The President of the ECB also told MEPs that the ECB now expected growth to be slower than we earlier expected describing European Commission forecasts of 2.2 per cent growth this year as somewhat on the optimistic side". However, he ruled out any further rate cuts "for the

Sterling was earlier bolstered by stronger than expected producer prices data and comments from John Townend, director for Europe at the Bank of England, which raised expectations that rates will not fall much further. Mr Townend said that Britain's faster rate of economic growth meant that "we have required, and still do require, interest rates roughly twice the continental level to secure price stability".

The recent jump in crude oil prices pushed March facto-UK £ to 0.71 ry gate prices up at a monthly rate of 0.6 0.70 per cent, the largest jump in nearly four 0.60 years. The annual 0.69 rate of increase rose from 0.2 per cent in 0.68 February to 0.5 per 0.67 cent. Raw material prices rose at their fastest rate for four years, climbing by

1.3 per cent in March but the annual rate showed a decline of 3.7 per cent. The increase was almost entirely due to an 18 per cent increase in crude oil prices during the month. Analysts said most of the impact, however, would prove a "one-off". In London, a late rally pushed the FTSE 100 index to a record closing high of 6.515.3, an increase of 94.7 points. Commentary, page 31

Pfeiffer may get $225m Compaq payoff

FROM ADAM JONES IN NEW YORK

ECKHARD PFEIFFER, the ousted chief executive of Compaq, could receive a payoff of more than $225 million (£140) million) after his departure from the computer maker. Mr Pfeiffer bowed to calls for his resignation from the board on Sunday, nine days after Compaq gave a profit warning. Earl Mason, the chief financial officer, also resigned. In a surging market, Com-paq shares had fallen slightly by lunchtime yesterday, having risen by as much as 4.2 per cent earlier in the day. At the end of last year, Mr Pfeiffer had share options worth $410 million. However, Compaq shares were then $42.

They are now about $23, having dived after the profit warning, cutting the value of his options to about $225 million. Mr Pfeiffer is likely to receive further compensation. Last year, he was paid $1.5 million in salary, plus a $3 mil-lion bonus and 875,000 share

Mr Mason had stock op-tions worth about $22.5 million at the end of last year. They should now be worth about $12.3 million. Compaq and its senior executives are being sued by investors who bought shares between January 27 and April 9. when the profit warning was issued. The lawsuit also claims that Compaq executives "took advantage of the million of Compaq shares before the profit warning. Analysts fear that Compaq is caught between selling its personal computers through traditional retail intermediaries and selling direct to consumers, in which the rival Dell excels. Ben Rosen, chairman, will INCHCAPE, the car distribution group, yesterday confirmed that it plans to pay a special dividend of 100p a share, sending its shares 12%p higher to 155p.

The £530 million payment, which the market has expected for some weeks, has been held up by the sale of Inchcape's South American bottling business to Embotelladora Arica, a Chilean soft drinks company. Arica has had to arrange a bond issue, a rights issue and a syndicated loan to raise the £457 million purchase price. Inchcape said that Arica is close to finalising its financing, with only the loan still to be arranged. Incheape intends to send shareholders a circular soon on the bottling disposal. Incheape, once a sprawling international conglomerate. has broken itself up in the past year to try to end the abysmal performance of its shares. They fell as low as 91p last year and remain far below their 550p of five years ago. The company, chaired by Lord Marshall of Knightsbridge, who also heads British Airways, sold its Russian bottling business last October. In January it raised £93 million from the sale of its business marketing consumer goods in the Asia Pacific region, and last month raised E72 million from selling its marketing operation in the Middle East. It has also sold a shipping services business to Electra Fleming, the venture capital firm.

Once it has sold its office equipment business in the Asia Pacific region, it will be reduced to an importer and distributor of margues including Toyota, Mazda and Chrysler.

Philip Cushing, chief executive, is due to leave the group in June, by which time Inchcape hopes to have completed its disposals.

Yesterday's announcement was prompted by a weekend

Company failures rise sharply

DESPITE falling interest rates and the supposed soft landing for the economy, there has been a sharp increase in companies collapsing (Jason Nissé writes). According to figures from KPMG, there were 304 receiverships in the first three months of this year, up 24 per cent on the last quarter of 1998 and up 19 per cent on the same period a year ago. The South East's 146 receiverships were up 46 per cent. quarter on quarter.

Mike Wheeler, of KPMG, said that although there was often a seasonal increase after Christmas, the rise compared with the same period last year was of some concern.

GARRY WESTON, chairman of Associated British Foods. and his family netted nearly £300 million yesterday as the firm surprised the stock market by returning £448 million to shareholders.

A significant step was also taken to ensure that the Weston family retains management control of the group. George Weston, 35, second son of the chairman, was appointed to the ABF board. Mr Weston and his family control nearly 60 per cent the firm, which includes Kingsmill bread, Silver Spoon sugar, and Twinings teas among its products. As such, the Westons rea-share special dividend. Their share of the £448 million total payout is £269 million but they earn another £23 million from the payment of the ordinary interim dividend. Net cash at the end of the half year to February 27 stood at £1.2 billion. Analysts estimate that at the year end, after paying the special and ordi-nary dividends, ABF will still have more than £1 billion of ABFs interim pre-tax profits were £109 million, down from £193 million in the previous first half. However, £74 million of the fall came as ABF wrote down the value of certain milling and baking assets. Underlying profits were £183 million compared with £193 million. The ordinary dividend is held at 4.25p a share.

Mr Weston senior said: "I do believe that as my family has such a large shareholding in the firm the family must have board representation." And he added: "George is a bright lad."

George Weston replaces Dav-Garman, who resigned on April 16 as the head of ABF's bakery business, which has been hit by intense competition.

LLOYD'S, the London insurance market, has bought £350 million worth of annual insurance cover for its financial safety net, the so-called central fund.

The new insurance policy means the fund now has more than £800 million at its disposal. There is about £175 million of cash in the central fund and Lloyd's has the power to call on another £300 million from members if necessary.

However, the central fund is a back stop claims are only paid from it if individual capital providers and names cannot meet obligations. This capital stands at about £15 billion.

The first £100 million of claims will be met from the central fund's cash resource. Then the insurance policy will kick in, for up to £350 million a year or £500 million over five years. The £300 million of "callable" capital is drawn on last.

The consortium members backing the insurance market are Swiss Re. Employers Re. The St Paul Companies. Hanover Re. XL Mid Ocean Re and the Chubb Corporation.

Max Taylor, chairman of Lloyd's, refused to disclose the cost of the policy but said customers would be better protected and the burden on capital providers who finance the central fund would be eased. He said the central fund levy made on market participants could be reduced and the chances that they would have to pay up towards the £300 million of "callable" capital was also reduced.

The central fund was seriously depleted in the early 1990s when a disastrous set struction and renewal plan - which was part funded by the central fund - it had E700 million at its disposal.

Deutsche and Telecom Italia to unveil merger in London

INTERNATIONAL RUSINESS EDITOR

THE marriage of Deutsche Telekom and Telecom Italia is expected to be announced in London today, creating a $200 billion (£125 billion) telecoms behemoth. The two telephone utilities have brokered a deal in an attempt to rescue the Italian company from a $65 billion hostile bid from Olivetti.

Intense negotiations over the past week will have focused on devising a formula that will dispel any concerns that a key Italian industry is being handed over to the German state.

The German Government retains a 72 per cent interest in Telekom while the Italian state owns only 3.4 of TI but retains a golden share. Massimo D'Alema, the Italian Prime Minister. said yesterday that any merger of the two utilities should be on equal terms and gave warning that the combined company could not be controlled by the TI's managing director. and his opposite number, Ron Sommer at Deutsche would be joint chief executives of a merged group. Analysts were sceptical yesterday that the parties had managed to tie down all the loose strands of the agreement in so short a time. Robert Grindle of HSBC commented: "It will be interesting if they announce the deal in London rather than in Italy or Germany. It may be telling about the future." Deutsche Telekom may be forced to unwind an existing alliance, including a 2 per cent share swap, with France Telecom. to satisfy European antitrust concerns. ### Director of Paribas advertises BNP case

By Paul Armstrong

CLAUDE BEBEAR, the only one of 15 directors of Banque Paribas to support the Fr102 billion (£10.2 billion) hostile takeover bid from Banque Nationale de Paris (BNP), sought to shore up his position yester-day by advertising his view of the bid in French newspapers.

The advertisements came as M Bébéar's position looked increasingly untenable after revelations of the details of a cross-shareholding agreement signed in 1989 between Paribas and AXA, the insurance group chaired by M Bebear.

Paribas says that under the deal, designed to protect both companies against hostile predators. AXA is unable to sell its 7.2 per cent stake in Paribas without its approval. If Paribas's claim that the arrangement is binding is right AXA cannot accept the BNP bid despite its chairman's vociferous support for it. M Bébéar is also a director of Société Générale, the French bank that has agreed to merge with Paribas. BNP's bid for Paribas runs alongside its Fr106 million similarly unsolicited offer for SocGen.

M Bébéar said in his state ment yesterday that BNP's proposal to merge the three banks represented a "very strong strategic opportunity".

He wrote: "I do not want to be in a position where I can be held responsible for adopting an attitude which leads certain of our shareholders to be deprived of extremely strong value creation potential."

M Bébéar advised Paribas

shareholders who do not support the BNP bid to sell "immediately" because the share price would fall if BNP's pro-

VOLVO operating profits increased by nearly 15 per cent to SKrl.2 billion (£90 million) in the first quarter of 1999, excluding Volvo Cars sold to Ford at the end of last year. The growth in profits came mainly from the trucks division — up 44 per cent — which accounts for 60 per cent of the group's SKr27 billion sales, and despite the buses division falling into the red to the tune of SKr67 million. Volvo blamed its wholesale reorganisation of bus production in Europe on the the fall.

Genus offers £20.7m

GENUS, the Ofex-traded bull breeder, sought to force the hand of the board of AIM-listed VDC yesterday by unveiling a £20.7 million cash offer. The offer by Genus represents a 43 per cent premium to VDC shares before it told the market of talks.

ATTEMPTS by American investors to force Signet, the Ernest Jones and H Samuel high street jeweller, to sell off part of its US business in the near future appear to have failed. MD Sass, the New York investment fund, had attempted to put down a motion, calling for a US float, at Signet's forth-coming annual meeting. Signet, however, said yesterday that Sass had failed to put down the necessary papers for a special resolution and therefore the motion is not on the agenda.

TTG 'threat' lifts First Choice price

By DOMINIC WALSH

SHARES of First Choice Holidays, already buoyed by ru-mours of a hostile bid from Airtours, jumped by 9 per cent yes-terday as Thomson Travel Group theatened to intervene. A successful bid by Airtours would not only scupper First

Choice's proposed merger with Kuoni of Switzerland, but would also send it leapfrog-ging above Thomson in terms of market share. A spokesman for Thomson said it would not stand by to see its position usurped. "We have been the market leader in the UK for 25 years and we have no intention of losing that position." he declared.

Although an outright bid from Thomson would hit competition problems - a threat Airtours must also weigh up - it has other options at its disposal. The most obvious would be to boost capacity. thereby sparking a damaging price war. Preussag of Germany, which controls Thomas Cook, could also intervene. Airtours is likely to to await the First Choice/Kuoni merger document, expected later this week, before deciding on whether to pounce. First Choice rose 14%p to 190p while Airtours shed 10½p to 488½p.

The programme followed a Rough Justice re-examination of the Carl Bridgewater case and the decision by the Court of Appeal

However, the Commission considered that the birel commenter over-simplified tactical considerations on both sides.

SUMMARY OF ADJUDICATION

The Government promised Scottish unions that workers would have more rights under new PFI programmes in an effort to quash a clash with the STUC. It is thought that unions will be involved in evaluating bidders for PFI projects and that employees will be guaranteed greater rights when transferring from the public to private sector.

Bob builds a HIT

HIT Entertainment claims another hit after the success of Kipper the Dog. Bob the Builder, the model animation series made its debut on BBC children's TV last month. Peter Or-

DIRECTORS of listed companies will have to be far more rigorous in their review of all internal controls, according to the latest draft corporate governance rules.

The new rules, from a committee headed by Nigel Turnbull, finance director at Rank, will, if accepted, come into effect next year. They mean that directors will have to state in their annual report that a company's systems are adequate and had been reviewed on an ongoing basis to ensure that all risks have been properly

Roger Davis, senior partner at PricewaterhouseCoopers, and deputy chairman of the committee, said: "The guidance is about round-the-clock internal controls being embedded within the company. This is a big shift in emphasis."

putting Kingfisher and Asda together, there is scope for creating a world-beating retail business but, so far, Sir Geoff appears to have succeeded only in convincing the City that Asda has attractions far beyond what Kingfisher is proposing to pay.

But the relative share price movements do not tell the whole story. While Sir Geoff may have failed to enthuse his audiences yesterday, he has strong support where it counts - among the major investors who have backed him since Kingfisher consisted of a trio of former British Sugar executives with ambitions to buy

The likelihood is that people such as Carol Galley, at Mercury Asset Management, will be prepared to go along with Sir Geoff in this latest development of his strategy. The critics yesterday who were denouncing cost sav-ings of £100 million as piffling were ignoring Sir Geoff's tendency towards conservatism. If the Asda camp had been in control of the proceedings, the figures might have looked very different and been presented with rather more razzmatazz. At Asda hq. they have demonstrated an ability to squeeze flattering headlines out of everything from a naff wed-

Even though Asda is a willing partner in this deal, even Allam Leighton yesterday could not quite avoid leaving open the tantalising possibility that Wal-Mart might come in with a bid that would trump the Kingfisher deal. "Never knowingly under-excited" could be the Asda slogan. cited" could be the Asda slogan.

Yet Asda's openness to a bid has been the gossip of the grocery sector for months, and there has been no sign of an overseas visitor brandishing cash. The company has pushed forward with its low-price policy at the cost of investment in the stores. Last year, it flirted with Safeway before deciding that the competibefore deciding that the competition authorities would never al-low such a deal and calling off the talks.

Given the current investigation into the grocery industry. 2 coupling with another UK supermarket group now seems highly unlikely, so the only contenders would be from abroad. If Wal-Mart really were keen to enter the UK market, Asda is the most appealing candidate in terms of store size, but it is far from being a dream match for Sam Walton's mega-retailer. Kingfisher is probably the best deal Asda shareholders will get. Sir Geoff may not be a spin doctor, but he will get that message across to those who matter.

All the wrong options at Barclays

B arclays describes as "an un-fortunate coincidence" the fact that its chairman and finance director chose to take their profits on some share options just five days before the bank had to admit that it was, once more, in need of a chief executive.

But the misfortune belongs to the directors and not the bank. Far from mourning the loss of Mike O'Neill's services, Barclays shares bounded upwards on the news that he would be staying in sunny California and yesterday they continued in that direction. Outside investors are betting on Barciays being on the receiving end of a bid, and they do not ex-pect to have to wait long.

Sir George Mathewson, chief executive of The Royal Bank of Scotland, has already mooted the idea of a get-together and is now thought likely to suggest a reverse takeover as an easy way of solving the Barclays management problems. So Andrew Buxton and Oliver Stocken might have been well advised to have held on to their options a little longer.

Yet their sales have renewed the curiosity over the Barclays predicament. After all, since the bank insists that the pair sold without any knowledge that Mr O'Neill had had a nasty turn and would not be taking up the job. their actions hardly amounted to a gesture of confidence in the new chief executive. Since Martin Taylor left, Barclays had been plodding on quite happily. Not doing anything drastic is generally a better strategy for a bank than being overly ambitious. So might Messrs Bux-ton and Stocken have detected a risk that Mr O'Neill planned to be something of an action man once he had settled behind the desk in Lombard Street? Could it be that the ex-Marine had ideas of aggressive expansion for Bar-clays? Might a board keen to make an appointment even have indicated some enthusiasm for going along with those ideas? And might that board have then suffered from a dose of cold feet?

Realising that the job might be more mundane than had been envisaged would not, of course, bring on an arrythmic heartbeat but it could be jolly depressing. And depression, on top of the influenza that hit Mr O'Neill just as he was supposed to be head-ing to London, could be nasty.

Disclosure is the best policy

t sounds marvellous. The £350 million a year insurance policytakes the strength of Lloyd's central safety net fund to north of £800 million. Barring a disaster of late 1980s/early 1990s proportions. that should provide ample cover for names and corporate capital providers who keel over.

But as any car and home owners can testify, the devil of any insurance policy is in the small print. It is difficult to endorse wholeheartedly the purchase of this policy because the cost is not disclosed.

The cost will eventually be published, in the next Lloyd's annual accounts, but non-disclosure now only raises suspicions that the policy is expensive. In addi-tion, there is precious little detail provided on whether the annual premiums on this five-year policy are renegotiable. Or how and when exclusion clauses might For Lloyd's, its ability to arrange this kind of insurance could help sentiment. If Swiss Re et al, who are backing the policy. are willing to take on the business, it ought to enhance Lloyd's credibility all round - for professionals and consumers alike. But one can insure against just about anything if cost is no object. If Lloyd's wants to be seen as a good risk, it should waste no time in admitting to the cost of its new cover.

Merely a Wim

PITY poor Wim Duisenberg. The ECB President, already struggling with a tumbling euro. has now run into linguistic problems - no small matter when every nuance can move markets. His favourite noncommittal formula for discussing possible rate changes — not " in the foreseeable future" — was yesterday re-placed by not "for the time be-ing" — which, as he explained to MEPs, can only be defined as being "longer than the foreseeable future". He wears special specs.

Gucci said its offer was a final attempt to extract an unconditional bid from M Arnault and end the four-month takeover saga. It said: "We have made a clear, straightforward offer and it is now down to LVMH to accept it or reject it."

M Pinault, whose business empire includes Christie's auctioneers, stands to make a $507 million profit if M Ar-naults offers $88 a share. He paid $75-a-share for his stake five weeks ago, diluting LVMH's stake in Gucci from 26 per cent to 17 per cent.

On Thursday, an court in Amsterdam, where Gucci is listed, will decide whether this manoeuvre merits a formal investigation. M Arnault has made many informal indications about a takeover offer, but has never tabled a formal bid.

First-quarter results from LVMH yesterday showed a 12.8 rise in sales for the first three months of 1999 on the back of a recovery in its Asian markets. The company, whose labels span Christian Lacroix to Moet & Chandon, said champagne showed the strongest growth with underlying sales up 24 per cent.

Cornelis van der Hoeven, chief executive of the Dutch company Ahold, is joining the board as a non-executive director. Ahold has been named as a possible counter-bidder for Asda.

Ian Gowrie-Smith, chairman, suggested Dr Gonelia might be prepared to accept £40 million to receive his money early, and to increase the val-

Sales last year fell from £13.8 million to £11 million. Although this was blamed on lower income from development partners, royalties and distribution revenues also fell.

Takeover rumours lift Devro

GRAHAM ALEXANDER, chief executive of Devro, is under pressure to make a formal statement to the London Stock Exchange saying whether he is planning to take the sausage skin manufacturer private (Fraser Nelson writes).

Shares of Devro closed up 12p at 1441/p yesterday, having traded at 152p earlier in the day, on word that Dr Alexander and other directors are seeking backing for a 170p-a-share takeover bid.

There have also been rumours that Leon Allen, Devro's former chairman, is considering a 200p-per-share cash offer backed by Schroder Ventures. At yesterday's closing price the company is worth £226 million.

In February, Devro denied it had received any takeover approaches. It would not comment on yesterday's rumours.

Buffett the spectre as M&S shares take off

THE alarm bells were ringing at Marks & Spencer last night as speculative buying carried the stock 104p higher to close at 433!4p having dipped as low as 410!5p earlier.

More than five million shares changed hands as the high street retailer began issuing 212 notices to establish the identity of US investors who have between them built up a near 3 per cent stake in the company.

US fund manager Brandes Investment Partners holds 44.3 million shares, or 6.9 million American Depository Receipts in M&S, equivalent to 3 per cent of the company. It has led to suggestions that American investor Warren Buffett is the man behind the buying. He has been linked with a number of blue chip companies in recent weeks, including British Airways, up 27p at 553½p.

Brokers were quick to point out that M&S is vulnerable after its recent profits warning and subsequent boardroom upheaval. The price has dropped from a peak of 61962p

One leading retail analyst poured scorn on the suggestion that the so-called Sage of Omaha was behind the buying: The problems at M&S are bigger than we thought just six months ago. American buying of the shares provides British investors with the ideal springboard to sell."

Meanwhile, the record books were again being rewritten as share prices on both sides of the Atlantic scaled new heights. The Dow Jones industrial average enjoyed its sixth-consecutive day of record gains and at the close of business in London was more than 250-points higher. The FTSE 100 index closed at its best of the day surging 94.7 points to a record closing high of 6,515.3. At the start of trading in New York, just a couple of hours earlier, the index had been just 20 points up.

Total turnover was a hefty 1.4 billion shares, swollen by share buybacks in Tomkins, down 3p to 25215p. (174.78 million shares) and Electra Investment Trust. Ip firmer at 716½p (72.1 million).

Among the leaders, the bar-British Steel, up 854p up at 159 p. while Diageo jumped profit numbers from LVMH. There was a muted response Hopes remain high that Wal-Mart, the US retailer, will Asda. In the meantime, all eyes are on the next possible bid target. Safeway seems a good bet, which was partly reflected in the price, up 8p at 268p on turnover of almost 20 million shares. Dresdner Kleinwort Benson, the broker, has raised its rating for the shares from "reduce" to "hold".

There was also heavy turnover in another food retailer

THE oil price continues to gather momentum, coming within a whisker yesterday of the $16-a-barrel level on world markets.

Shares in the main oil producers responded positively to the move. BP Amoco led the way with a rise of 57%p to £11.82%, while Shell went up by 13p to 4574p. Among the explorers, Enterprise rose 38p to 423p and

Laporte continued to be driven higher with a rise of 231-p at 750p. The shares have been the subject of persistent bid speculation despite the breakdown in talks with an unnamed party just last week The price has surged by almost 30 per cent in the past few weeks.

First Choice Holidays continued to make headway climbing 14½p to 190p on suggestions that Airtours, down 10%p at 488%p, may spoil the party and make an offer. First Choice is putting together a merger with rival Kuoni, the Swiss holiday group.

Speculative buying hoisted HP Bulmer 18%p to 347%p. Talk is of a bid from the Continent. The cidermaker is still trading well below the 412p achieved last year.

Is someone going to tell us what is going on at FII Group? Just a few days ago, the price was bumping along the bottom at 164:p. Yesterday it climbed 7½p to 27½p on turnover of 168,605 shares. Not had when the normal price and size in the market is just 3,000 shares.

Note the strength of Devro. where the price perked up 124p to 144½p in late trading on fresh talk that the management is looking to take the company private. Some say the terms could be worth 200p a share. Shares in the sausage skin maker were traded as high as 545p last year, before being floored by a profits warning.

News that Glynwed had sold eight more businesses for £21 million, marking its final exit from traditional metals activities so it can concentrate on pipes and cookers saw the shares dip 6p to 2191/2p. ☐ GILT-EDGED: After a nervous start, prices recovered to outperform German bunds and close with small gains on the day. In the futures pit, the June series of the long gilt ended 9p dearer at £117.05 in low turnover that saw just 17,000 contracts completed decided to surrender to City fashion and hand cash back to shareholders. About time some may say, but without news of the 50p special dividend the shares could have collapsed. Instead, the stock rose 17%p to 443%p.

Even ignoring the £74 million of asset writedowns, ABF's half-year figures were pretty grim. Operating profits slipped from £150 million to £144 million. In the future the return of capital will reduce the contribution of investment income, which is already sliding because of lower interest rates. The strength of sterling continues to hurt, and competition in many areas of ABF's world is also crushing. But while it is an extremely trying situation it is not a hopeless one. Opportunities exist in higher-margin ingredients. The appointment of Peter Jackson as chief executive and John

IT WAS a good job Associated British Foods Bason as finance director are steps in the right direction in terms of executive diversity. The elevation of George Weston to the board also indicates that serious thought is being given to the succession. For the Weston family shows no sign of wanting to loosen its grip on this company, and in those circumstances it can only be assumed that the top job will be kept in the family.

Young George has been given responsibility for baking, one of the toughest assignments in an industry that creaks under the weight of management challenge. It he succeeds in any meaningful way, this will be a share worth buying. Right now the shares trade on 13 times earnings. if you take off 50p from the share price for the special dividend. That is cheap, but the intransigence of ABF's markets undermines the attractions of the shares. Only hold.

SkyePharma

THIS was supposed to be breakthrough year for Skye-Pharma, but the drug delivery company still offers more promise than profit. Smith-Kline Beecham has received marketing approval for Paxil CR, the SkyePharma version of its big-selling anti-depressant, but it is not exactly rushing it into the market. SkyePharma's dependence on the plans of its big pharma customers should add some perspective to all those claims about a share of multibillionpound revenues and the low risks of the drug delivery model. The focus is now switching to DepoCyt. a niche cancer drug, that at least allows Skye-Pharma to share 50 per cent of the US revenues.

Revenues so far have been in desperately short supply for a company worth £300 million. Brightstone, the American marketing arm, was once of enlarged prostate. But this does not look sufficient to alseen as a useful moneyspinlow the shares to break out of ner but has just been closed afthe 60p to 90p range they ter failing to generate meanhave largely inhabited for the ingful sales. the shares are forever moving on rumoured successes or setbacks of unconfirmed clients.

Until the plans for Paxil CR become clearer, the shares at 66½p remain a gamble.

First Choice

FIRST CHOICE shareholders who held their nerve when the shares sank to 83p last October must be feeling pleased with themselves. An agreed merger with Kuoni of Switzerland, swiftly followed by the threat of a hostile takeover by Airtours, has sent the stock flying to a new high of 190p.

The rumoured Airtours move - and it is nothing but a rumour at the moment could come in at between 220p-230p a share. And on the face of it, an Airtours takeover is more attractive to First Choice stockholders than the Kuoni merger, in which a new company is being set up to buy both Kuoni and First Choice. If Airtours offered cash, and First Choice

Airtours from trying. First Choice shareholders must consider the possibility that the price of their stock could fall if takeover ambitions are stymied by regulatory disapproval.

Yet even if Airtours decides against a move, the climate looks good ahead of the proposed Kuoni merger. The industry has cut capacity this summer by 3 per cent and is also enjoying a 5 per cent rise in bookings. That means there are fewer last-minute seats to sell at a discount and that means better margins.

The Airtours rumours — allied to the threat by Thomson to become involved - emphasises the long-term attraction of First Choice shares. Hold.

production firms. Companies can benefit from good programming ideas, clearly. But they also need the capital backing to be able to hang on to the licensing and merchandising opportu-nities. Many of HIT's peers have to sell these profit streams in order to stay in the production game.

Unfortunately for sharebuyers, HIT's attractions are well known. Its price has marched from 163p at flotation three years ago to 667 p yesterday. That is 40 plus expectations. Look for value elsewhere.

High-techs on a high-wire act in Wall Street bubble

Plunging shares in American

sector threaten tremors beyond Silicon Valley

hat will happen to the American economic miracle when the personal computer becomes just another cheap electronic gadget, boited together in China or Thailand out of components made in Korea and Taiwan?

What will happen to the profits of America's dominant hightech companies when people access the Internet through souped-up phones costing just a few tens of dollars, while fullfunction personal computers start to sell in no-name plastic boxes for the same price as microwave ovens or colour television sets?

And how will these tech companies maintain their extraodrinary margins (in the case of Microsoft, a net 40.1 per cent on sales) once their business customers realise they are being exploited and transfer the humdrum business of ordering computers from gullible information managers into the hands of ordinary purchasing managers who will expect the same sort of bulk discounts they now extract for purchases of filing cabinets, desk phones and swivelling office chairs?

I have been asking these questions for several years now, since I was first struck by the peculiar economic distortion that seemed to lie behind the personal computer industry's astonishing financial success.

The personal computer was essentially a pretty simple, unbranded, commodity product with little in the way of advanced technological content. But it was manufactured by an industry whose own production costs were falling at the rate of 50 per cent or more each

On the basis of normal economic principles, one would have expected PC prices to fall rapidly and the profits of manufacturers and software suppliers to disappear. This was what generally happened to consumer electronics — and there was intrinsically nothing more complicated or expensive about a computer than a television set or a VCR.

Yet two companies — Microsoft and Intel — had managed to turn the normal consequences of competition upside down. Instead of PC prices falling to reflect lower production costs and vast economies of scale, the features attached to computers kept growing, while their prices remained more or less unchanged — at about $2,000 (£1,200). By constantly changing their specifications the dominant computer manufacturers and component suppliers were able to squeeze extraordinarily high profit margins (Microsoft's net margin on sales last year was 40.1 per cent) out of their bewildered

Sooner or later this business model was bound to break down as consumers and business users alike realised that they were paying for an alphabet soup of "enhancements" — MMX, Active-X, SCSI, USB — which hey did not need and which actually made their computers larger and less reliable. This finally started to happen in the US consumer tranket about a year ago and, more recently, in the business markets and around the world. Wall Street nevertheless assumed that high-tech companies would somehow remain invulnerable to the financial effects. But once computer prices really start crashing, will even Intel and Microsoft be able to avoid drastic price cuts and massive declines in profits, once PC manufacturers are forced to sell their finished boxes for $200 instead of $2,000?

Commonsense questions such as these, which were blithely ignored while the high-tech bubble expanded on Wall Street, are starting to be asked with growing urgency by American economists and investors as the bubble begins to implode. After last week's sudden plunge in technology shares, set off by Wednesday's warning from Compaq, the world's largest PC manufacturer, that its profits would be about half analysts' expectations, it is worth considering what might be the consequences of a possible financial earthquake in Silicon Valley, not only on Wall Street but also on the American economy and the monetary policy of the Federal Reserve Board.

In terms of output and employment, high-tech, which in modern American parlance is synonymous with the computer and communications sectors, may only account for between 5 and 10 per cent of the US economy, depending on definitions. But high-tech is far more important as a financial phenomenon and as a driver of investment, profits and productivity growth.

icrosoft, for example, employs only 27,000 people and has revenues of just $14.5 billion, but it is now far and away the world's most valuable company. In fact, the $420 billion total price of its shares in late March on Wall Street was greater than the combined valuations of General Motors. Ford, Exon, Boeing and Du Pont combined, companies which between them generate 30 times as much revenue and employ 100 times as many people.

Such mind-boggling figures — reminiscient of the calculations done in Japan in the late 1980s, which showed that the value of the land surrounding the Imperial Palace in Tokyo was worth more than the entire state of California — may be of primary interest to stock market investors worried about the impact of the high-tech bubble on the valuations of Wall Street.

In fact, in the past 12 months the high-tech sector has been almost single-handedly driving the bull market on Wall Street. If Microsoft, Intel, AT&T, Dell and a handful of other high-tech giants were taken out of the index, the S&P 500 would actually be down on the year.

But the impact of the American high-tech boom on the US and world economies extends far beyond the financial markets. By some calculations, as much as 40 per cent of incremental investment spending in the past five years in America has been related to information technology. Most importantly, there is now a widespread consensus in America, embracing professional economists, business leaders and Federal Reserve officials, that the benefits of high-tech investment can go a long way to explain the near-miraculous "new paradigm" of American economic growth.

Alice Rivlin, the Fed's deputy chairman, said last week that the Fed had decided to re-examine critically all the traditional economic concepts which purported to link inflation with low unemployment and economic growth.

It was possible, she noted, that the new technologically that the new technologically that the new technologically driven economy would permanently produce more benign economic conditions than any America has seen before. In the past, very low unemployment generally led to higher wages, rising inflation and falling productivity, as less skilled workers were brought into the labour market. But today, the shortages of workers were encouraging businesses to redouble their investments in new technology. As a result, labour shortages could, according to Ms Rivlin, actually raise productivity and even help to push inflation downwards — contrary to the findings of conventional economic models.

o many conventional economists (myself included) Mr Rivin's comments smacked of precisely the kind of millennarian over-optimism that one would expect to hear near the top of an economic cycle, just when inflation was finally about to threaten a long period of extremely stable growth.

It would be quite appropriate, therefore, if the Ped's conversion to new-era thinking coincided precisely with the bursting of the Wall Street high-tech bubble. The fact that last week's collapse in technology shares coincided with an equally sudden upsurge in inflation-sensitive oil, paper.

ly sudden upsurge in inflation-sensitive oil, paper, commodity and other heavy industry stocks on Wall Street, drew further attention to the possible threats to America's "new paradigm" of non-inflationary economic growth.

Of course, a fall in the price of computer shares would not in itself detract from the productivity-enhancing effects of using computers. On the contrary, the availability of cheaper and simpler computers should, if anything, help to accelerate productivity growth. From this point of view, the bad news for shareholders of Compaq and Microsoft should be very good news for the US economy as a whole. But such optimism begs questions about the real role of computer technology in the American economy's spectacularly successful recent performance.

Has the key role of personal computer technology been, as Ms Rivlin appears to believe, to revolutionise the efficiency of American business, thereby allowing living standards to grow rapidly without inflation? Or has the PC's biggest economic effect been to create the high-tech stock market bubble that has powered personal consumption and fuelled business investment? And if the financial bubble related to the PC finally blows up, will economic optimism continue to drive the

If the stock market trends of the past few days persist, these questions will be asked more urgently across America and may even start to be answered.

Wal-Mart casts big shadow over Asda deal with Kingfisher

ingfisher and Asda say, indeed they instst, that their planned merger has nothing to do with the possible arrival in the UK of Wal-Mart. No one believes them.

Wal-Mart is not only the biggest retailer in the world, it is twice as big as its nearest rival. With an annual turnover of $137 billion (£85 billion), it makes the combined Kingfisher/Asda sales of £17 billion look distinctly puny.

In the US, Wal-Mart oper-

In the US, Wal-Mart operates out of huge warehouses, offering rock-bottom prices on everything from food to clothing to electronic equipment. It has opened in a number of overseas markets, in Latin America and the Far East, and has in the past two years made its first move into Europe.

It has bought two hypermarket businesses in Germany; the 21-store Wertkauf chain and 74 hypermarkets acquired from the Spar Handels group. By entering Germany, it is taking on Metro, the largest European retail group. Wal-Mart has been offering deep discounts that Metro has been forced to match.

Retailers in the UK are nervous that if Wal-Mart arrives on our shores it will do the same. It will be great news for consumers, but would wreck the plans of other mass market retailers, from Safeway to John Lewis. Wal-Mart — and a handful of continental operators — could yet choose to spoil the Kingfisher deal by coming in with a cash offer for Asda. Enough investors are convinced it will happen to have pushed the Asda price above the value of Kingfisher's all-share offer.

Germany is in many ways a much easier market for Wal-Mart to enter than the UK. "It has a price-sensitive culture and Germany has pretty poor retailing standards." one analyst said.

Germany also has far more small, family-owned hypermarket operators, which can be easier to acquire. "Then again," the analyst said. "let's not pretend. If Wal-Mart wanted to buy something here, it could easily do it."

here, it could easily do it."

Asda has long been seen as the obvious target for WalMart. It has some of the largest stores in the UK — although they are still only one fifth the size of Wal-Mart's largest — and it has a similar reports on the US retail giant that is waiting

hyped-up company culture. Although Asda refuses to comment, there is little doubt that Asda and Wal-Mart have discussed a deal. Wal-Mart has built up a warehest of about $8 billion, and could buy one of Asda's largest rivals such as J Sainsbury or — in what would be the best catch of all — Tesco. Tesco. the market leader in the UK, is also developing a strong hypermarket business in Eastern Europe, which would fit beautifully with Wal-Mart's German business. Wal-Mart took the position of the world's largest retailer in 1992, just 30 years after it was founded by Sam Walton. The son of an Oklahoma farmer, he opened his first store in Arkansas, where the business is still based, and by 1971 had just 38. In the next ten years this had grown to 330, although this still left it as only the 33rd-largest retailer in the

During the Eighties, it began studying its rivals closely, adopting new technology at a very early stage, and building up a highly efficient distribution system. When Sam Walton died in 1992, his family was worth $25 billion,

Wal-Mart pioneered the art of motivating workers, something that British retailers have tried to emulate with varying degrees of success. The company's 850,000 employees still take part daily in the Wal-Mart cheer, in which they spell out the company name and ask: "Who's number one? the customer!" And, in a practice somewhat reminiscent of China under Chairman Mao, the one question that staff are always meant to ask themselves is "What would Sam do?"

The "ten-foot attitude" obliges store workers to look customers in the eye, greet them, and ask if they need any help whenever they pass within ten feet. It is all part of what Sam Walton called "aggressive hospitality". and much of it has been adopted in the UK, most vigorously by Asda.

The other part of the Wal-Mart formula is extremely backroom operations. Ware-house staff at Wal-Mart's US distribution centres no longer need to work from printed instructions when making up an order. Instead, they wear a headset that allows them to move around the storeroom taking spoken instructions from a computer. They can also talk back to the computer, asking for clarification and further instructions. The system gives Wal-Mart one of the fastest and most efficient order fulfilment systems in Curiously, although Kingfisher insists that its strategy has nothing to do with defending itself against Wal-Mart, its in-house magazine has carried articles on how the US company operates. Sir Geoffrey Mulcahy, chief executive of Kingfisher, is clearly someone who follows the old maxim of "know thine enemy".

Taking advice

THE awfully named Invensys, the group formed by the merger between BTR and Siebe, which has been advertising to baffled readers of national newspapers this week, is now following in a familiar City tradition by requiring advisers to fight each other for their jobs.

The engineering conglomerate, just like Diageo and Royal & SunAlliance before it, is whittling down its list of City advisers. There are currently seven. Siebe used, deep breath. Warburg Dillon Read and Dresdner Kleinwort Benson as well as retaining Morgan Stanley "for strategic issues".

BTR had CSFB, Cazenove, Schroders and Goldman Sachs — and much good it did them, now I come to think of it. Goldman and Morgan Stanley have been involved in a strategic review of Invensys, but this does not mean they will survive.

One likely and piquant outcome, though, would be a tender reunion between Simon Robertson, who left Kleinwort after falling out with the Germans and is now at Goldmans, and his old friends there. Expect results by early next month.

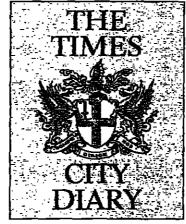

SO WHAT kept you? The Asda-Kingfisher merger details were expected at 7.30 yesterday morning, then definitely forecast for 11.00am. They hit the screens after 1.00pm, barely in time for the analysis to absorb them before their briefing an hour later. The delay, I learn, came because

The delay, I learn, came because someone had to translate the documents into French, for the benefit of Kingfisher's French shareholders. Someone might have thought of that beforehand.

Swiss role

THERE is a rule that says the further they fall, the higher they bounce. One of the least-popular men in the City, whose fall delighted many of his exemployees, has just landed a new and unlike aid inh ell-paid job. Mathis Cabiallavetta, who led Union Bank of Switzerland into the "merger" with Swiss Bank Corporation in 1997 and then lost a large proportion of his workforce while the majority of their SBC counterparts kept their jobs, is becoming vice-chairman of mega-rich Marsh & McLennan, the American financial services outfit

Cabiallavetta's own Waterloo came last October when the Swiss had to admit to a $400 million loss on the Long Term Capital Management hedge fund and he lost his job.

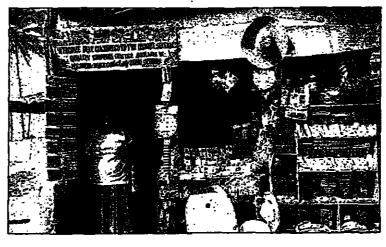

Hair based or Zurich and will have

He is based at Zurich and will have offices both there and in New York, where he will "work to advance the strategic development of the company's global activities", whatever that means. His new employer owns Putnam Investments, the investment manager. I ring New York to ask how much Putnam itself lost on LTCM, but no one seems to know.

A RARE chance next week to hear Francesco Borelli, head of the Milan magistrate pool and the man whose investigations burst open the two main political parties in Italy, on investigating and prosecuting high-profile corruption and serious fraud.

Borelli's probe into financial links between business and politics led to the disgrace and exile of Bettino Craxi, the former PM, and he is something of a hero in his native country. He will speak at Middle Temple Hall, courtesy of the British Italian Law Association and the British-Italian Society.

Also there is David Calvert-Smith, our Director of Public Prosecutions. So far there are 140 acceptances, but not one, the organisers tell me, from our own Serious Fraud Office — or from the Financial Services Authority or any of its Subordinate bodies.

Goa, Goa, gone

WHEN Keith Oates launched his failed hid for the Marks & Spencer leadership last autumn, it was assumed that Sir Richard Greenbury was in India on holiday. As I can now reveal, he was spearheading M&S's ambitious new venture there.

Admittedly, Marks & Spencer (India) has yet to progress beyond the beachfront at Goa, and as you can see below, there are still a few difficulties with the corporate branding. But a visitor reports that the store manager's motto is: "If we haven't got it in stock, we will get it by tomorrow."

stock, we will get it by tomorrow."

PROPERTY FINANCE LAWYER

c. Five Years' PQE - Great Prospects

It's not surprising that one of the first finance led firms to seize the opportunity to develop the synergies between its thriving finance practice and its focused property practice is now firmly established as a top player in property finance work.

So it won't shock you to learn that our Client's dynamic property finance team is leading the way in structuring innovative property finance deals for a terrific list of blue chip banks - a list which has expanded year on year as their success continues to inspire confidence among the City's most desirable clients.

It makes sense then that our Client has recognised this team as a core business area going forward. Due to planned growth they are looking for another specialised property finance lawyer with a minimum of four years' relevant banking/finance experience to join in the growth and development of the group. If you have the technical excellence, business development skills and ambition required, our Client can demonstrate all the commitment you will need, both to your career development and your area of specialisation. If you are already a Partner elsewhere, our Client would also be interested in talking to you.

For further information in complete confidence, please contact Debble Cochrane or Joe Macrae on 0171 523 1240 (evenings/weekends 0181 374 8455) or write to thern at ZMB, 37 Sun Street, London EC2M 2PL. Confidential fax: 0171 523 3839. E-mail: debble.cochrane@zarakgroup.com

INTERNATIONAL MEDIA COMPANY

Legal Adviser

South East

Listed in New York, this fast growing entertainment company operates a DTH platform and cable network - comprising 22 channels of programming. With the planned launch of a premium sports channel and increase of channel output to 32, the company expects to establish a premier position in the European market, having successfully completed a major bond and equity financing programme.

Since its inception in 1997 the company has expanded rapidly and now seeks a 2-5 year qualified media/commercial lawyer to take on a pivotal role at this crucial and exciting time in its development. Reporting to the Head of Legal, but working closely alongside the DTH management, the successful individual will be part of the programming management team, based at its operational headquarters in the South East.

You will need television experience, preferably programming acquisitions - either in-house from a TV, video or film company, or one of their distributors - or from a private practice firm recognised for their expertise in this area. Exposure to international transaction work will be an advantage. With a good academic background, you should have an outgoing, proactive and commercial approach with the ability to gain credibility quickly both here and internationally. With a flexible outlook, you will need energy, vigour and enthusiasm to adapt. well to the pioneering spirit of this dynamic and innovative company.

This is an excellent opportunity for a lawyer keen to take early responsibility and to break out of a strict legal role into the operational front line. A negotiable salary and benefits package.

IP/IT PARTNER TOP TEN CITY FIRM

Equity Partnership Opportunities

This top ten City and international law firm is well known for its distinctive approach to the law - an informal style that puts personality and professionalism on an equal footing. It is also a firm which has recognised the importance of technology in the expansion of its practice generally and is therefore wholly committed to driving forward its IP/IT practice.

The IP/IT department handles a wide variety of transaction and dispute work reflecting the broad range of industries in the firm's blue chip client base. Much of the work is international and requires an ability to handle large scale and complex structures and documents.

The firm seeks senior practitioners who will be excited by the opportunity of playing a key role in the expansion of this core practice area. You are likely to be an existing partner, either from a major City or Regional firm who has successfully developed a specialist profile. You will enjoy the process of practice development and will be keen to work with and develop an ambitious and talented young team to support a wide ranging client base.

For the appropriate successful candidate the firm will recruit directly into equity partnership.

Working life just got better....

You enjoy handling high-quality work within a fast-paced environment. However, you are frustrated by the lack of day-to-day contact with your clients' business and their failure to share with you the commercial objectives which drive their decisions. Imagine handling challenging and stimulating City-quality work and being an integral part of a management team in an attractive headquarters location. Zeneca Agrochemicals offers you that opportunity.

Zeneca Agrochemicals is the crop protection business of AstraZeneca, the UK's fifth largest company, which has one of the most well-respected in-house legal functions in the country, with a fully accredited programme of professional training and development. In a business employing around 7,000 staff and selling to over 130 countries, lawyers are exposed to a wide variety of cutting-edge work, often with an International dimension, and attain a high level of responsibility at a relatively junior level. The business expects its lawyers to be "hands on" and to add value by providing proactive guidance and advice to the strategic and commercial functions.

Zeneca Agrochemicals is now seeking additional talented lawyers with 1-3 years' corporate or commercial experience gained in a highly-regarded law firm or in-house legal department. A working knowledge of EC competition law and/or intellectual property matters, while not essential, would be a significant advantage in this role.

The skills set and experience you will acquire from working within a dynamic business and legal environment are second to none. Furthermore you will have the satisfaction of becoming a member of a hardworking but friendly professional team in a leading international bioscience business.

Like this opportunity, there will be something extra that singles you out....

JUDGE OF THE COURT OF FIRST INSTANCE OF THE EUROPEAN COMMUNITIES, LUXEMBOURG

The Court of First Instance was established in 1988. It is attached to the Court of Justice of the European Communities and has its seat at the Court in Luxembourg. The Court has a wide jurisdiction, but deals mainly with competition and commercial matters, and with disputes between the institutions of the European Union and their staff.

The UK Judge of the Court is appointed by common accord of the Member States on the recommendation of the Government, Following Judge Christopher Bellamy's forthcoming appointment to the new Competition Commission, this post will fall vacant. The Government invites applications from candidates possessing the necessary qualifications and expertise for this important judicial appointment.

Applicants should normally be under 60 on 1 October 1999, when the successful candidate will be ready to take up appointment. They must possess a ten year general qualification (or its equivalent in Scotland or Northern Ireland). The successful applicant will be required to demonstrate a sound working knowledge of French, as the Court's deliberations are not subject to translation. Serving holders of judicial office are eligible to apply but, if successful, they will be expected to resign their office

The Government will select for appointment the best qualified candidate, regardless of ethnic origin, gender, marital status, sexual orientation, political affiliation, religion or (subject to the physical requirements of the office) disability.

An application form, together with further information for applicants, is available by telephoning 0171 210 8983 (voicemail will operate outside normal office hours) or by writing to:

Leasetec

EUROPEAN REGIONAL COUNSEL

To £Excellent + Bens

Since its inception in 1979, Leasetec has distinguished itself as an industry leader in the provision of operating and capital lease financing for the products of manufacturers of IT equipment and software worldwide. With its business spanning Europe, North America and Asia, the company originates more than US$1 billion in new leases each year and currently manages a portfolio of over $2 billion in lease assets.

As a result of continued growth in the region, Leasetec is seeking to appoint a European Regional Counsel. Based at its European Headquarters in Ascot, you will provide high-level advice to the business and establish the European legal function for the company.

With between 4 and 7 years' post-qualification experience, gained either in a City practice or in-house, you will have a strong commercial law and transactional background together with some involvement in corporate and finance Issues. A knowledge of equipment leasing, whilst highly desirable, is not a prerequisite.

You will be a motivated, commercially-minded individual who is keen to contribute in a strategic manner to the business. Crucially you will be able to work autonomously, liaising effectively with local lawyers in each jurisdiction with the ability to deal comfortably with management at all levels internationally. Some travel will be required and a second European language would be an advantage.

This is a challenging and exciting opportunity for a high calibre individual to take on a pivotal role in this international company. In return, Leasetec offers an excellent package including competitive base salary plus a comprehensive benefits package.

For further information, in complete confidence, please contact June Mesrie on 0171 405 6062 (0181 442 0641 evenings/weskends) or write to her at QD in-House Legal.

Banking & finance lawyers

Equity capital markets

This highly respected full service international organisation has a reputation for both professionalism and maturity in its business approach. It continues to grow organically and by way of a focused strategy of acquisitions.

The equity capital markets business area of investment banking has identified the need for a senior corporate finance lawyer (minimum of 4 years' poe) with experience of IPOs to perform a commercial, advisory and transactional role as part of the talented Legal Department. The existing team consists of first class lawyers with refreshingly down to earth attitudes from the most senior member down. Remuneration and prospects for progression and first class.

Cur client is the fund management subsidiary

Our client is the fund michagement substoary of an international financial services group. With total assets under management exceeding £45 bn and a global presence, it is a market leader.

The group legal department is seeking a further member to be responsible for a mixed portfolio of work advising both operating and administrative departments. The role will encompass general commercial contractual legal advice to the group and board, together with some specific fund and investment trust advice, aithough prior funds experience is not prerequisite. The position will also involve some secretariat duties and management of a company secretarial assistant, so an in depth knowledge of this area will be essential.

Senior derivatives lawyer Major European incuse Our client is a large full service investment bank who has experienced international development success and is well-known for the speed and innovation of its banking services.

The legal department now wishes to appoint a senior specialist to assume responsibility for the derivatives business and related areas, Ideally candidates will have a min of 4 yrs' poe and be capable of undertaking the broadest range of matters encompassing complex credit derivatives and structured trades and repackagings. It is also envisaged that the successful individual will manage more junior assistants. This is a unique opportunity to take up this first time appointment, and build an expert team within a dynamic and supportive institution.

We recruit lawyers into banks and other financial institutions. Please contact Deborah Kirkman or Stuart Morton.

Allen & Overy continues to widen the gap between itself and its competitors. Our role as a global player is more prominent than ever. We have achieved critical mass in all of the world's key financial centres.

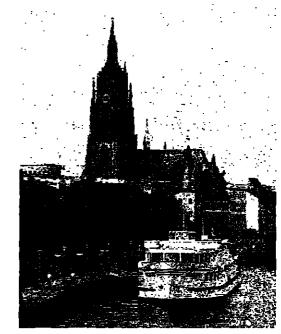

The Frankfurt office plays a key role in our strategic global expansion providing advice to corporations and financial institutions on all aspects of German, English and EC Law. Its broad finance practice in particular is set for continued growth.

As part of this expansion we now seek finance lawyers with up to 5 years' post qualification experience to assist in:

a broad range of capital markets and securitisation transactions; or general banking, asset finance and project finance related work.

You will need to be UK qualified and fluent in both oral and written German. Ideally you will have relevant finance experience gained from a top city practice. Alternatively, you will be working as a finance lawyer in Germany. You may join our Frankfurt office directly or spend a period in our London office before moving to Frankfurt.

As Germany continues to play an increasingly influential role in Europe, this is an opportunity to be in the right place at the right time and play a significant role on the global legal stage.

And now for the important stuff.

Project Finance, Structured Finance, M&A, Corporate Finance

Career-defining decisions should be made on the consideration of a variety of factors, not a single incentive.

Unquestionably a successful global law firm, our Client is looking for partners who will become an integrated part of its business because they are inspired by its clientele and culture, rather than the cachet of a certain salary figure. Of course you will be paid what you are worth and the firm's top performers command seven figure incomes.

Established in London for over 20 years, the firm has close to 40 lawyers providing outstanding service and achieving ground-breaking results for existing clients across Europe. Over 70% of London's business is locally generated. The remainder emanates from the firm's prestigious and internationally active US clientele.

The London-based lawyers cover key corporate and finance practice areas and they have created a dynamic yet collegiate working environment where achievements are recognised and rewarded.

For partners specialising in the above areas, this is an opportunity to be part of a firm wholly committed to significant further growth in London and the consolidation of its position as one of the elite global players. Call Joe Macrae or Yvonne Smyth for an initial, completely confidential discussion on 0171-523 3838 (0171-359 5212 evenings/weekends) or write to them at ZMB, 37 Sun Street, London EC2M 2PL. #### Self exposure

Whatever answer you give in an interview can be taken two ways as it's pleant to be taken or as its opposite. It can be beard as you intend it - as a comment on the matter you're talking about - or it can be interpreted as a revelation not about your subject matter but about you yourself.

We saw an example of this

recently. The candidate was asked why he wanted to move, and explained that his boss was unfortunately not a lawyer and found it difficult to understand legal concepts. His role as legal adviset. therefore, was andervalued. The candidate sumed that the interviewer, being a lawyer hanself, would sympathise with his predicament. He miscalculated. The message rebounded against him. The interviewer suspected that if the boas couldn's understand what the may not have been getting clear and cogent advice. The fault, assumed the interviewer, was probably the lawyer's.

Whatever you say - and there are no exceptions – you're relling the interviewer about yourself. Michael Chambers

Telephone: (01) 661 3311 Email: recruit@algoodbody.ie In over 100 years in business we've seen quite a few changes but the important things remain the same. Like the kind of people who work here.

The calibre of our people and the value of their expertise have helped us to become Ireland's premier law firm, and with over 250 legal staff in our Dublin Office alone, we represent a huge range of interests, from multi-nationals to multi-media companies.

If you feel you can understand the legal and business requirements of our clients and can offer insight and specialist knowledge, you will thrive at A & L Goodbody.

You will be well rewarded for your talents and effort. Apart from a competitive remuneration package, you will have a fulfilling career in an exciting and supportive working environment, along with ongoing training and career counselling.

In particular, we wish to recruit people with experience in the following areas:

Corporate Insurance Law (ref. 1499-IL)

Our Insurance Law Unit advises life & non life, captive and reinsurance clients and insurance intermediaries on all aspects of insurance law in Ireland. Typically, this involves advising on the establishment of insurance companies, obtaining authorisation, insurance related M&A activity and other insurance projects. We wish to recruit a two/three year-qualified commercial lawyer to join the unit. Applicants will ideally have some relevant experience and/or an interest in developing a career in this area.

Asset Financing (ref. 1499-AF)

Based in our IFSC offices, you'll be working as part of a dedicated and growing asset financing team. While specific experience in asset financing or banking law would be an advantage, we will consider applications from recently qualified lawyers interested in making a career in this area.

General Corporate Law (ref: 1499-GC)

You'll be working as a member of one of our commercial law teams, dealing with the full range of commercial law issues and benefiting from opportunities to learn from senior members of the team. Ideally with two or three years' postqualification experience, you will have a thorough grasp of the basics of corporate and commercial law gained in a relevant environment.

The closing date for applications is Tuesday 4th May

Smoked out: two firms have withdrawn from pursuing tobacco cases under the "no win" system, where the claimants had no insurance cover

Deal that could spell the end of legal aid

than 20 years ensured access to justice for those who cannot afford to use the courts. Now it is about to be abolished - at least for accident compensation claims which make up most of civil case numbers. The Government intends that access to justice will be maintained through "no win, no fee" deals in which lawyers take on cases for nothing and can charge an enhanced fee — a "success fee" — if they win. But as the Access to Justice Bill starts going through the Commons, evidence is emergne to suggest that these pl will drive out any case that is not a sure winner, leaving consumers with no effective access to the legal system.

"No win no fee" deals, or conditional fee arrangements. came in four years ago. They depend crucially on insurance which covers the costs, so that the litigant is not left paying the legal fees of the other side should he or she lose.

In 1995 the Law Society negotiated a scheme. Accident Line Protect (ALP), with Abbey Life. which provides such cover. It can only be used by law firms who are members of the Law Society's Personal Injury Panel (ie, recognised as experts in this field of law). But if the firm joins the scheme, then it must use Accident Line in "no win, no fee" deals. In other words, there is no choice about whether or not to issue a policy to the client, let alone which insurer to use. How does it work? The Accident Line scheme provides cover of a £100,000, which is adequate for most cases and its Plans for a 'no win, no fee' deal for accident compensation claims will deny people access to the legal system, say Martyn Day and Frank Patterson price for each case, either £95.68 or £161.20 (depending on the type of case), is good value bearing in mind the risks and costs of litigation.

But while law firms can spread their risks by ensuring "success fees" that reflect the risk on each case, insurers are stuck with a fixed premium and evidence suggests that they cannot make it pay. lanuary AL suspend from membership a number of firms on the grounds of their claims record. Ours was one, despite a success rate close to 95 per cent. Further, in the three cases where claims on the policy were made, our costs were comparatively small (less than £10,000 in total).

Ultimately we were able to convince the insurance company that we should be allowed to continue operating the scheme. But the episode has clearly been a warning shot across our bows in terms of making future claims.

Accident Line Protect is a commercial enterprise and must expect to make a profit. Part of that process obviously involves ensuring that those law firms it deals with work effectively and efficiently with as few claims as possible. But the news that a success rate in excess of 95 per cent can be required may shock many lawyers. More importantly, where does it leave the public? What it means is that when legal aid goes, people cannot expect help with legal claims that have a less than 95 per cent chance of success. We do not believe the Government envisaged this — indeed the Lord Chancellor first spoke of legal aid being withheld where people had less than a 75 per cent chance of success. But he had to withdraw that because it would have denied access to tial litigants.

Lawvers act for those who have suffered injury, often se-vere and disabling injury, which prevents them from working, causes them enormous stress and financial difficulty. Many such cases are pursued by lawyers - even though the chances of success and being paid are much less than this 95 per cent figure.

ut lawyers will not want to risk being thrown off the Accident Line scheme. So they face a dilemma: do they stump up the losing side's costs themselves? Or not take the case on in the first place? Financial realities will mean such cases become unacceptable risks and will not be pursued.

Either personal injury law-yers must be allowed to use other insurers or the Government must agree to retain legal aid for riskier cases which seems unlikely. Last month our firm and an-

ed — and found wanting — in the European Court of Human Rights. This challenge is expected to be brought after the Court of Appeal's recent decision to uphold many of the libel allegations in an action brought by the fast-food chain McDonald's against two environmental campaigners. Dave Morris and Helen Steel.

Their recent appeal resulted from a 314-day libel trial in 1997 in which Mr Justice Bell held that McDonald's had been libelled in a leaslet containing criticisms about the company's business practices. The judge awarded £60,000 damages to McDonald's. The Court of Appeal allowed the appeal in part, and reduced the damages to £40,000.

The current state of the English law of defamation is impossible to reconcile with any developed concept of free speech. Defendants are liable even if they make statements that they reasonably believe to be true on matters of public interest, the plaintiff may receive substantial damages whether or not financial loss has been caused; and legal aid is unavailable. London has long been the libel capital of the world. B-list celebrities, public figures with something discreditable to conceal, and companies oversensitive to criticism issue writs asserting that they have been "lowered in the estimation of right-thinking people" by a newspaper article or other ephemer-al publication which would long ago have been forgotten but for the plaintiff's insistence on telling the world of its contents. Our libel law assumes that life is lived in a gentlemen's club in which damage to reputation is one of the most serious injuries that a person can suffer. In defamation law, the proper response to an insult is to challenge the culprit to fight a high-risk public duel that can be avoided only by a grovelling apology and a large tax-free sum of damages.

Article 10 of the European Convention on Human Rights guarantees the right to freedom of expression. Any interference must be necessary in a democratic society and proportionate. These criteria were stated by the European Court in Lingens v Austria in 1986 when it found that the rights of a journalist had been breached when an Austrian court fined him for publishing an article critical of the Chancellor, Bruno Kreisky. The European Court expressed its concern about state action which "would be likely to deter journalists from contributing to public discussion of issues affecting the life of the community", and so would impede public access to information. English law recognises the power of a writ to silence critics on matters of public importance and acknowledges that influential plaintiffs have other means to make their voice heard. For those reasons, in 1993 the House of Lords held that a local authori-ty could not sue Times Newspapers for libel. Lord Keith of Kinkel explained that the difficulty of proving allegations by admissible evidence "may prevent the publication of matters which it is very desirable to make public" in relation to a governmental body which "should be open to uninhibited public criticism", and which has other means of defending its reputation. The same principle was applied in 1997 to prevent the Referendum Party from suing a newspaper for libel.

The McDonald's case concerned matters of public importance relating to the activi-ties of a multinational company. Some of the allegations made by the campaigners were found by Mr Justice Bell to be true that the company paid low wages to its workers in this country, was cruel in the rearing of some of its animals, and exploited chil-dren in the targeting of its advertising. The Court of Appeal accepted that it was fair comment to say that McDonald's employees worldwide do badly in terms of pay and conditions, and there was justification for the allegation that too much McDonald's food provides the consumer with a high-fat diet creating a real risk of heart disease.

If Ms Steel and Mr Morris pursue their case in Strasbourg, the European Court is likely to conclude that English law fails adequately to control libel actions by companies.

Our law deters those who may have something of value to add to the public debate on the standards adopted by companies such as McDonald's. That is especially so where there is a lack of equality of arms, with the plaintiff able to employ lawyers of its choice and the defendants unable to claim legal aid, however strong their case on the merits and however impecunious they may be. It is disproportionate to require such defendants to prove the truth of allegations made in good faith in matters of public interest against an organisation with ample resources to answer criticisms and protect its reputation.

The McLibel case has achieved what many lawyers thought impossible to lower further the reputation of our law of defamation in the minds of all right-thinking people.

Our client, a leading American household and personal care consumer products company, currently has an exceptional opportunity for an experienced patents lawyer to take sole responsibility for the company's extensive patent portfolio which soans

You will have a minimum of 8 years practical experience, acquired at either a top European law firm or multi-national (ideally FMCG), and will possess extensive European Patent Office experience. In addition to providing a broad range of legal advice and counsel on matters relating to patents, proprietary and trade secret information, you will also be largely responsible for the continuing development of a patent department with the long-term aim of recruiting additional patent practitioners and providing a training programme for trainees. It is therefore imperative that you possess not only strong legal knowledge but also managenal ability and a dynamic, pro-active personality.

Based at the company's European Headquarters in Surrey, this challenging position necessitates a well-travelled individual with the experience and personal gravitas that is essential to the success of what is a pivotal role within the company's world-wide activities. In recognition of this an excellent remuneration package is offered which will include a company car (or car allowance), relocation package and benefits including stock options.

The present Ombudsman is Ann Abraham. She was appointed by the Lord Chancellor to oversee the handling of complaints about solicitors, barristers and licensed conveyancers by their respective professional bodies — in the case of the solicitors, the Office for the Supervision of Solicitors (OSS).

In a recent Ombudsman's Casebook in The Law Society's Gazette, she takes the OSS to task — not just for dilatoriness (it is struggling with a huge backlog of complaints against solicitors) but for not paying sufficient attention to clients' hurt feelings. The latest Case-book takes matters even further with the sexual allegations of Ms A. Solicitors are not subject to the same rules as doctors concerning sexual relationships with their clients. This is for the simple reason that solicitors do not usually ask their clients to take their clothes off. The current Guide to the Professional Conduct of Solicitors says that a solicitor should "consider" whether a sexual relationship with a client might place the solicitor's interests in conflict with the client, or otherwise the best interests of the client. In the case of Ms A, the complaint was by the residuary beneficiary of a will that the solicitor executor had inade improper suggestions and sexual advances towards her".

impair the solicitor's ability to act in

The complaint had been rejected by the OSS on the grounds that there had been no breach of the rules of professional conduct because Ms A was not the solicitor's client and there had been no sexual relationship. Normally thatwould have been the end of the matter.

Ms Abraham took a different view. She decided that the relevant principle was the rule which requires that solicitors should not use their position to take advantage of another person. "In this instance the suggestion was that an older, better educated, more powerful man had put a vulnerable, younger woman in an unwelcome situation." This indeed is a suggestion that could often be made.

The Ombudsman went on to say: This is the sort of complaint that the OSS has to adjudicate on if the profession is to be competently regulated." Such an approach opens the way to every recipient of a solicitor's sexual advance being able to make a profession-al complaint. The capacity for mischief-making by former partners is infi-

No one supports the serial lechers of our profession but the Ombudsman may be going a fumble too far. If a woman feels that she has been assaulted by a solicitor, then she should complain to the police, as the victim of Angus Diggle did. If she is the victim of sexual harassment in the workplace then employment tribunals offer remedies. Stalking is now illegal. But if a gay solicitor makes an advance to me which I find embarrassing, should I really be entitled to have him professionally disciplined?

Scottish lawyers considered these issues in a case which involved a solicitor fondling the buttocks of a young woman in a pub. The complaint was made not by the woman but by a fellow solicitor who witnessed the incident. The disciplinary tribunal rejected the complaint and, in a robust statement of principle, said that the regulation of personal behaviour, however disreputable it may appear, was not a matter for the Law Society unless it involved sexual advances to a client for perceived advantage.

Professional conduct rules exist to protect the public, not to regulate morality and sexual behaviour. The OSS has a backlog of 9,000 complaints and the figure is increasing by 95 complaints a week without the additional burden of dealing with every aggrieved former lover. The Ombudsman should confine herself to monitoring existing complaints and not to encouraging

How much is an injury worth?

The public feel current levels of damages are too low, says Andrew Burrows person is rendered para-A plegic in a car crash, or loses a hand in an accident at work. If someone else can be shown to be legally respon-sible for those injuries, the victim is entitled to damages.

The purpose of the damages is to compensate the victim for his or her losses. Damages for financial losses, such as loss of earnings and medical expenses, can, in theory at least, be calculated with mathematical precision.

But the courts also award damages for the victim's non-financial losses: for the pain and suffering and the loss of enjoyment of life. For these "losses" there is demonstrably right answer to the question "How much should be awarded?" Under the present system this is a matter for the courts to decide.

The judges award what they consider to be fair and reasonable in line with past decisions. A flexible tariff of values has been developed. Until gleaned only by trawling through the law reports and specialist books. But since then it has been set out in easily accessible form in Guidelines for the Assessment of General Damages in Personal Injury, published by the Judicial Studies Board.

The present scale runs from under £100 for minor cuts and bruises up to about £150,000 for the worst injuries. So, for example, the conventional range for quadriplegia is £120,000 to £150,00; for moderate brain damage it is £40,000 to £65,000; for the complete loss of sight in one eye it is £22,500 to £25,000; and for minor whiplash injuries it is up to £3,500. The range of award for each injury gives the judges the flexibility to award a higher or lower sum depending on the circumstances of the victim.

The Law Commission has been reviewing how much the damages for non-financial loss should be and how they should be fixed. In our final report, published today, we recommend that the present system of assessment by judges should continue. It should not be replaced by a fixed tariff laid down by Parliament. Nor is there good reason to spend money in setting up and running a Compensation Adviso-

On the other hand There is we consider that for serious injuries, damno reason ages for non-financial loss are at present too low. We recommend for an that they should be increased by between advisory 50 per cent and 100 per cent so that the top of the scale would board to be at least £225,000 but not more than be set up £300,000. This would line with public opin-1992 this scale of values could be ion as to what is a fair level. This is shown not only by the responses to our consultation paper on this subject, but also by a survey by the Office for National Statistics (ONS).

The ONS interviewed 3,639 people. They were given four case histories and asked to say how much each injured person should be awarded for his or her non-financial loss. The results, presented in our report, suggest that the majority of the population consider current levels to be too low and should be raised by, at the very least, 50 per cent.

Reforms will offer short sharp shock

mental changes to the legal system in the past 100 years is less than a week away. The "big bang" in the sourts will take place next Monday when new rules goverring the conduct of civil procedure come into force.

The rules have come out of the proposals in Lord Woolf's report on the legal system, klown as Access to Justice. aid will affect all small and medium-sized companies using the courts. The aim is to produce a legal process that is shorter, sharper and less costly th its participants.

Rchard Brown, a partner in Thomas Eggar Church Adams the law firm, explained: Jusice may be rougher, but it will certainly be quicker. The objective is to slim down procedures and give courts teeth to ge rid of time-wasters."

Stephen Alambritis, of the Federation of Small Businesses (IEB), said: "We welcome these changes, which should demalish some of the mystery and egalese surrounding the courts. Small businesses are often aught in the trap of either not being able to afford to contest a dispute and at the same time not being eligible for legalaid. These moves to speed up the process should help."

The main proposals are two new tracks of litigation, a fast tract for cases under £15,000 and a multi track for complex cases under this figure or cases over £15,000. Cases will be allocated to one of these tracks depending on their value and complexity. Cases under £5.00 will go to arbitration and be dealt with in a procedure similar to the old small

For a claim assigned to the fasi track, trial should begin within 30 weeks from being issued. In order to cut costs and time, there will be only one exwittess rather than one incentives to both sides to from each side, and some evidence may be submitted on paper rather than verbally. As well as submitting claims and defences, parties will also be obliged to complete an alloca-tion questionnaire to demonstrate what is likely to be in-volved in proving their case. The intention is that cases will proceed in a simpler and more predictable manner than before and that the investment of time and costs should be in proportion to the nature and value of the claim.

There will also be what is referred to as "front loading" of cases as clients and their lawyers will be expected to disclose and share information with the other parties before litigation begins. More preparatory work will have to be done earlier by both clients and lawyers. Parties will be encouraged to resolve their disputes without the need for trial.

One of the biggest changes will be that once proceedings begin, the courts - rather than the plaintiff - will proactively manage the cases, ensuring that they progress swiftly through to, and during, trial. Sanctions may be applied to parties who fail to comply with the court's timetable. "It will no longer be an option for a company to say we'll slow down or speed up at our convenience'. It will be like a fast-moving conveyor belt, so that once proceedings have been issued, companies will no longer be able to set the pace." said Mr Brown.

A new procedure has been designed for the immediate. summary disposal of weak cases or defences. The court can give judgment there and then without either party being present in order to speed through cases and cut the

A new "offer to settle" procedure will provide financial settle early. "The demands on litigants as well as their lawyers to meet timetables will be much greater, but with good planning and organisation the new procedures could achieve significant improvements on the present system," Mr Brown said.

Antony Gold, a litigation partner in Eversheds, the law firm, also believes that the changes will work to the ad-vantage of small and mediumsized firms, which will benefit from "a level playing field and helping to arrest the old pro-cess where larger firms could stand firm and bully smaller firms into submission, stopping the companies with the deepest pockets winning".

owever, some observ ers are concerned that L the changes will her-ald a new era in which some of the finer points of a case are in danger of being lost and in which the exhaustive examination of issues will end. "It will not be the sort of allembracing justice that people have been used to," said one.

"It will no longer be a case of hiding behind the ramparts. the classic response. As soon as a firm finds itself involved in a dispute, it needs to address the issue immediately and seriously, and then it can work the changes to its advantage. Any company that puts a legal dispute on the back burner will come a cropper."

The FSB will be launching a video guide to the new tracks and procedures on May 4 entitled See you in Court. Contact: FSB, 01253 336000.

Check out for the millennium bug

■ Auditors are warning small and medium-sized firms that they are not taking enough steps to show that their information technology systems millennium-compliant and, in the worst cases, risk having their reports and accounts qualified as a result. The problem stems from the fact that many smaller firms mistakenly believe that the issue of proving their IT systems are fit to cope with the millennium bug is the probiem of large corporations only. This is not the case. In order for an auditor to pass the accounts, a company, no matter what its size, needs to be able to demonstrate that its system will not grind to a halt at the

To help smaller firms to combat the bug, Greenwich Mean Time, the software company, has produced a product called Check 2000, which can be downloaded on to a computer and will detect which programs are not millennium-compliant and offer a step-bystep guide on how to fix the

A survey by Microsoft shows that small businesses are not embracing the Internet quite as the marketing men intended to increase business and gain competitive advantage. Instead it is being used for the more mundane tasks of e-mailing (95 per cent), information searches (76 per cent), downloading files (60 per cent), reading business news (40 per cent) and transfer-ring files (35 per cent).

Vere Awdry, marketing director of GR Lane Health Products es, says that the Restrictive Practices Court must protect the public and uphold resale price maintenance (RPM) on medicines. The firm, based in Gloucester, employs 100 and has a turnover of £15 million.

"RPM on medicines, which the supermarkets are campaigning to end, exists for a reason, it is there not just to protect community pharmacists but also the public.

"If we start to treat medicinal products in the same as way as we would bars of chocolate - by dispensing with RPM and encouraging price competition - custom-ers may make their selection based on price rather than medical necessity. RPM serves a purpose, and we believe that it plays a vital role tor in ARM's success is combining work with fun, and holding frequent social events. "We regularly crack open the champagne when we have a product launch or a key development and keep a bottle from each event as a memento," he says. ARM also holds social events for employees' families.

"I wanted to create a feeling that we knew each other, and more importantly, that we trusted each other," Mr Saxby adds. "It's only by trusting each other that our business partners could trust us."

All staff are given share op-tions, and ARM designers and engineers receive options and cash when projects on which they have worked reach fruition and are patented. "It's a very flat, open culture, with the people at the centre of everything. Mr Saxby says. "We feed off each other's enthusiasm."

Campbell continues to call the shots on home soil

or footballers, the hazards of going abroad to ply their trade are well documented. They face the problem of a new language, which is tricky for those who have yet to master English completely. Then there is the difficulty about the food - wot, no fry-ups? Finally, they undergo the trials and the tribulations of training for more than two hours per day. As Ian Rush said of his unhappy sojourn in Italy: "It's like a foreign country."

Rush, however, never had to deal with racist abuse (however well-intentioned) from officials of his own club. When Kevin Campbell was described as "our black cannibal" by the chairman of Trabzonspor, the Turkish club he had joined in preference to helping Nottingham Forest to battle against relegation, he knew that home was where the heart is, even if it meant being loaned to Everton, another side battling at the bottom of the FA Carling Premiership.

In fact, thanks to the goals of Campbell, our Fantasy Player of the Week, Everton could be in lower mid-table before too long. Campbell's two scores against Newcastle United at St James' Park took Everton to 37 points for the season, level on points with Coventry City. And, as everybody knows, finishing above Coventry means avoiding relegation: if the Titanic had been painted sky blue, so they say, she would never have gone down.

Not that Gordon Strachan's team do not like to keep things interesting. Their defeat by Middlesbrough at Highfield Road on Saturday could yet prove significant in Premiership terms, and it was also an important game for the winner of our weekly prize of £500. Daniel Ryan, of Hersham, who works as a retail manager for a well-known supermarket.

Gary McAllister and Dean Gordon, two of the goalscorers from that game, were in Mr Ryan's team, Ryan's Lions 98, bringing in a tidy six points, with Gordon's total boosted by his part in Middlesbrough's goalless draw with Chelsea in midweek, the clean sheet being worth three more. 'Middlesbrough are good defensively, which is why I signed him." Mr Ryan said. to remain in the competition.

Albert Ferrer, of Chelsea, scored four points — three from the Middlesbrough-Chelsea game, with one appearance point for the Chelsea v Leicester City match. He was withdrawn two minutes too early to qualify for two more points for a clean sheet, Chelsea not having conceded a goal at that point. Nigel Martyn, Dominic Matteo. Gareth Southgate and Paul Scholes scored three each. Add two-point contributions from Frank Lampard and Dean Sturridge, and Ryan's Lions came up with a healthy 29 points. Of Mr Ryan's team, only Nicolas Anelka, of Arsenal, failed to score. Mr Ryan supports ... Arsenal. ☐ A poor week for the overall leader, Phil Clarke's Shabadi United, who scored only a single point, saw These Eat Beans, selected by Nicholas Keighley, open up a nine-point gap at the top of the leaderboard.

Sheringham making up for lost time

t was a weekend full of sur-prises as far as The Times time ago, the few that still own him were duly rewarded with a much-needed seven points for a goal and two assists. Another significant Fantasy League flop, Mark Hughes, also managed to get on to the scoresheet for the first time this season. With just a solitary assist to his name before Saturday, Hughes increased his points tally game average over the whole season stands at a meagre 0.18. Recent additions to the player list were also in the points on

Southampton against Blackburn Saturday. Kevin Campbell made it 16 points in four games and Graham Stuart scored his second goal for Charlton Athletic in the space of a week. Marian Pahars. Chris Marsden and Scot Gemmill all scored their first goals for their

> The big-name strikers failed to make any impact. Dwight Yorke and Andy Cole were rested ahead of their vital game in Turin tomorrow, resulting in frustration for a large proportion of Fantasy League managers.

With Michael Owen missing the remainder of the season with a hamstring injury, and Jimmy Floyd Hasselbaink limping off with a similar injury, all the leading Fantasy League managers have been detrimentally affected, thus giving the chasing pack a chance to catch up — albeit for some slightly too late.

Are you on target to win £500?

ongratulations to Richard Ball, of London SW4, the main winner of ON-Target from last week. Even if you do not have a Fantasy League team, you can enter this new game now — or enter a new one simply for ON-Target. All managers have the chance to win a share of £28,000 of new prizes. The Times has teamed up with EA Sports to offer you the chance to own the renowned Fifa 99 game. Every week you could win:

Ist prize: £500 plus EA Sports Pack ■ 4 runners-up: EA Sports Packs ■ 10 additional runners-up: Fifa 99 for the PlayStation; Fifa 99 for the PC; EA Sports T-Shirt, keyring and mini football plus a record bag.

If you already have a team in the main game, you are ready to play ON-Target. Simply check your Fantasy League players' score each week and see if their total is the same as our ON-Target score. If you have scored the exact target points, a quick call to our ON-Target winners' line will put you in the draw to win one of the 15 prizes. You can enter at any time and there is no limit to how many teams you can enter.

Andrew's injury puts Wilkinson in pivotal role

By David Hands, Rugby correspondent

CLIVE WOODWARD is not a man to wish misfortune on anyone, but the England coach is certain to have the chance to see Jonny Wilkinson playing fly half during the last month of the domestic season. The dislocated shoulder suffered Rob Andrew during weastle's controversial Newcastle's defeat by Wasps on Sunday means that Wilkinson must move from the centre for the club's remaining games, among them the Tetley's Bitter Cup final at Twickenham on

Woodward has steered clear of fielding Wilkinson in the position where he made his name as a schoolboy, partly because he had no firm evidence of his ability to manage a game at first-class level. In any case, it suited him to play Wilkinson in the centre throughout the Five Nations Championship after injury deprived England of the services of Will Greenwood. Phil de Glanville and, finally, Jeremy

Now. however, Newcastle have five Premiership games and a cup final to play without Andrew, who will have a scan today on his damaged shoulder. The first of those is against Richmond at Kingston Park tomorrow, for which Wilkinson, assuming that he recovers from a twisted ankle, will not only wear the No 10 jersey, as he has all season for his club, but will play fly half, too. Andrew has been wearing No 12 but playing in the position in which he won all but one of his 71 England caps.

Some good comes out of this because it will give Jonny a good opportunity to have some experience there, in some tough games with the pressure on." Steve Bates, the Newcastle coach, said yesterday. "It could be the ideal situation for Jonny to show what he can do. I'm desperately disappointed for Rob, but I don't think we have seen the last of him."

Newcastle cannot afford to lose any more games if they are to ensure a top-six finish and qualify for Europe next season, which could be worth more than £500,000 to the participants, but Woodward will be looking ahead to England's summer visit to Australia and the centennial international in Sydney, as well as the friendly matches with Canada and the United States in August. These are games in which, if change is to be made before the World Cup, Wilkinson could be thrown the England significant Twickenham occasion next month, but, even at 36, he is not a man to allow injury to terminate his playing career before he is ready. Cardiff are preparing a bid for Chris Wyatt, the Llanelli lock, who was one of the outstanding performers for Wales during the Five Nations Championship. Wyatt will be out of contract in July and Cardiff are likely to offer a greater salary than Llanelli can afford. Since they expect to lose Derwyn Jones to a French club and Steve Moore is suffering from a long-term injury. they also need to bolster the second-row department. "We have started negotiations with Chris's agent with a view to keeping him at Llanelli," Stuart Gallacher, the Llanelli chairman, said, "As yet, we have not had any financial approach, but we are aware that a number of clubs. including Cardiff, are very interested in Chris and one or two other Llanelli players."

Becker treads warily on clay

THIS is where it all starts - officially, at least. The European clay-court season has been up running for a couple of weeks now, but tradition states that this is where the hard work begins for the run into Roland Garros and the French Open. And as places go, the Monte Carlo Country Club is not bad. The remarkably blue sky is broken only by the whirr of a helicopter bringing the overtaxed and the overstressed to their haven by the Medi-

Boris Becker has known about the delights of Monaco for many a year — he has owned a home here since he was a teenager — though the club's clay courts are still something of a challenge. Becker has yet to win a title on the slow red dirt and, in 12 years of trying here, he has reached the final only three times. This is his thirteenth attempt and, after his firstround victory against Cedric Pioline yesterday, he was feeling lucky.

"I am probably the best player never to have won a clay-court tournament — for the moment," he said after his 2½-hour struggle. The prospect of victory.

TENNIS By Alix Ramsay Tennis Correspondent in Monte Carlo

however, is still a long way off. Yesterday, he had chances to win in the second set and chances to lose in third, but eventually came through, as he always does against Pioline, 6-4, 5-7, 6-4. Poor old Pioline. He has not beaten

Becker in nine attempts and yesterday was only the first time he had even taken a set from him. As his hopes of victory disappeared, so did his No I status in France as Jérôme Golmard, who had a simple 6-1, 6-2 win over Davide Sanguinetti, took the top spot. Golmard plays Becker in the second round.

Not that Golmard got it all his own way yesterday. Together with Arnaud Clement, he lost his opening doubles to Tim Henman and Olivier Delaitre. Hen-man and Greg Rusedski both spent the day familiarising themselves with the difficulties of a surface that requires patience, thought and a good deal of nerve before heading for the net. The problem for both men lies in the swarms of Spanish-speaking young men who had all perfected their top spin forehand before they could say "hola" and tend to wear their more cavalier opponents down from the baseline.

Henman will see how far his patience will stretch today when he opens his account against Fernando Meligeni, of Brazil, who defeated Andrew Ilie, of Australia, 6-4, 5-7, 6-2. Should Henman succeed, perhaps he could pass on the secret to Goran Ivanisevic, who turned in one of his most abysmal performances racket throwing and all - as he lost 6-l, 6-4 to Hicham Arazi

Where an Internet service provider (ISP) which had received and stored a posting on its news server, transmitted that posting to its subscribers who wished to download ir the ISP was a publisher of the posting at common law, but not for the purposes of section 1(2), and (3) of the Defamation Act 1996.

Mr Justice Morland so held in the Queen's Bench Division in a reserved judgment when allowing an application by way of summons by Mr Laurence Godfrey to strike out part of the defence of Demon Internet Ltd as disclosing no sustainable defence to a libel action against them by the plaintiff alleging that they had published a posting defamatory of the plaintiff via the internet usernet system on the news

Section 1 of the 1996 Act provides: "(I) In defamation proceed-ings a person has a defence if he shows that - (a) he was not the author, editor or publisher of the statement complained of, (b) he took reasonable care in relation to its publication, and (c) he did not know, and had no reason to be-lieve, that what he did caused or contributed to the publication of a defamatory statement.

MR JUSTICE MORLAND said that the defendants were an internet service provider. Via the Internet, a worldwide computer network, a person who subscribed to an ISP could submit an article known as a posting to the news server based at his ISP which would disseminate the posting via the Internet, and it would ultimately reach the news servers of other ISPs around the world, such as that of the defendants.

Internet users could access and read the posting by connecting to their local ISPs news servers and requesting it. The ISP would then transmit the posting to the user who could download it on to his A posting defamatory of the plaintiff made by an unknown per-

The defendants chose to receive and store the news group containing the posting which could be accessed by subscribers, and could obliterate it, as they later did. His Lordship said that the defendants were clearly not commercial publishers of the posting for the purposes of section 1(2) and 1(3) of the 1996 Act and were therefore able to satisfy the requirement of section 1(1)(a), the first part of the defence under section I of the 1996

However, after the posting was published at common law, as from the date that the defendants became aware of the defamatory content of it, they could not satisfy the additional requirements of section I(I)(b) and (c) and could not therefore avail themselves of the protection provided by section 1 of the Accordingly the plaintiff's sum-

Mr Justin Rushbrooke for Mr ISP who accessed the newsgroup Bolkiah v KPMG (a Firm) Before Lord Browne-Wilkinson

A solicitor owed a strict and unqualified duty to a former client not to disclose or misuse confidential information which had been obtained in the course of a fiduciary relationship and not to expose the client to any avoidable risk that the information might unwittingly or inadvertently be communicated to

QC and Mr David Quest for

LORD MILLETT said that the question was whether, and if so in what circumstances, a firm of accountants which had provided litieation support services to a former its possession information which was confidential to him, could undertake work for another client vith an adverse interest. The question had become of increased importance with the emersence of international firms that operated on a global scale and offered a comprehensive range or services. KPMG were a large and well known English firm of chartered accountants with associated but separate firms around the world.

with money management services. KPMG had undertaken the annual audit of its core funds, the exact size of which was secret but was valued at billions of dollars.

er of the Sultan of Brunei and for many years had been chairman of the BIA. He was, however, no longer in favour with the Sultan and had been removed from his position as chairman.

Over the years, numerous large transfers of capital were made out of the core funds. The destination those special transfers did not form part of KPMG's audit.

KPMG were required to accept an annual representation from the board, of which Prince Jefri was chairman, that the transfers were on behalf of or for the benefit of the Brunei Government.

For 18 months between 1996 and 1998 KPMG were also retained by one of Prince Jefri's companies on his behalf to undertake a substantial investigation in connection with major litigation in which he was involved.

The investigation was given the code name Project Lucy and was mainly conducted by KPMG's London forensic accounting department which provided extensive litigation support services and per-formed tasks usually undertaken by solicitors such as interviewing witnesses, taking part in conferences, drafting subpoenas, reviewing pleadings and preparing ideas for

They were given a substantial volume of confidential information concerning the identity, location and legal structure of Prince Jefri's assets and financial affairs.

The litigation was settled in March 1998 and KPMG were formally instructed to discontinue Project Lucy in May 1998. In June 1998 the Brunei Government appointed a task force to investigate the BIA's activities. In July 1998 KPMG were formally instructed by the BiA to assist the task force in investigating the withdrawal of assets by means of the special transfers. That assignment was given the code name

KPMG than gave its staff instructions that an information barrier, popularly know as a "chinese wall", should be put in place within the forensic accounting depart-ment and special arrangements were established to protect the confidentiality of information in KPMG's possession which related to Prince Jefri.

No one who was in possession of information from Project Lucy was selected to work on project Gemma and arrangements were made to for the work to be done in a secure office in a different building. The issues raised had not previously been considered by the House of Lords. The controlling authority in England hitherto had been Court of Appeal decision in Rakusen v Ellis Munday and Clarke ([1912] | Ch 831) which was authority for the propositions: There was no absolute rule of law in England that a solicitor could not act in litigation against a former client and 2 The solicitor might be restrained

longing to the former client. The duties of an accountant could not be greater than those of a olicitor, and might be less, for information relating to his client's affairs which was in a solicitor's possession was usually privileged as well as confidential.

However, some of the informa-tion obtained by KPMG was likely to have attracted litigation privilege, although not solicitor-client privilege, and it was conceded by KPMG that an accountant who provided litigation support servic-es of the kind which they provided to Prince Jefri must be treated in the same way as a solicitor.

The court's jurisdiction to inter-vene on behalf of a former client was founded not on the avoidance of any impropriety but on the pro-tection of confidential information. It was incumbent on the former client to establish: I The solicitor was in possession of information which was confidential to him and to the disclosure of which he had not consented, and 2 The information was or might be relevant to the new matter in which the interest of the new client was or might be adverse to his

Although the burden of proof was on the former client, it was not a heavy one. The former might readily be inferred and the latter would often be obvious.

Whether founded on contract or equity, solicitors' duty to preserve confidentiality was unqualified. It was a duty to keep the informatio confidential, not merely to take all reasonable steps to do so. duty not to communicate the information to a third party. It was a duty not to misuse it.

His Lordship agreed with criticisms made of the test laid down Rakusen. It imposed an unfair burden on a former client, exposed him to a potential avoidable risk to which he had not consented and failed to give him sufficient assurance that his confidence would be respected. It also exposed the solicitor to a degree of uncertainty which could inhibit him in his dealings with the second client.

It was difficult to discern any justification in principle for a rule which exposed a former client. without his consent, to any avoidable risk, however slight, that confidential information imparted in the course of a fiduciary relationship could be used to his disadvan-

Anything less than a strict approach failed to give effect to the policy on which legal professional privilege was based. It was of overriding importance to the proper administration of justice that a client should be able to have complete confidence that what he told his lawyer would remain secret.

Chinese walls were widely used by financial institutions in the City of London and elsewhere. They

Prince Jefri, a former Minister Finance, was the youngest brothof the Sultan of Brunei and for cant risk of the disclosure or miscant risk of the disclosure or misness was carried on by a conglom-

KPMG insisted that, like other large firms of accountants, they were accustomed to maintaining client confidentiality, not just with-in the firm but also within a particular team. They stressed that large firms of accountants were very experienced in the erection and operation of information barriers. They asserted it was part of the professional culture in which staff worked and became second nature to them. They said the arrangements they made satisfied the most stringent test and there was no risk that information obtained in the course of Project Lucy had or would become available to anyone on Project Gemma.

His Lordship was not persuaded that that was so. Even in the financial services industry good practice required there to be established institutional arrangements designed to prevent the flow of in-formation between different departments. The chinese walls which featured in the present case were es-tablished ad hoc and were erected within a single department.

When the number of personnel involved was taken into account to-gether with the fact that the teams engaged on Project Lucy and Project Gemma each had a rotating membership, so that members may have joined from and returned to other projects, the difficulty of enforcing confidentiality or preventing unwitting disclosure was very great. It was one thing, for example, to separate and erect chinese walls beween the insolvency, audit, taxation and forensic departments. Such departments often worked from different offices and there might be relatively little movement of personnel between them.

But it was quite another to at-tempt an information barrier between members of the same department who had been accustomed to working with each other. Forensic accountancy was said to be an area in which new and unusual prob lems often arose and parmers and managers shared information and expertise. Furthermore physical segregation was not necessarily adequate especially within a single department

In his Lordship's opinion, an effective chinese wall needed to be an established part of the organisational structure of the firm, not created ad hoc.

KPMG had not discharged the heavy burden of showing that there was no risk of confidential information confidential to Prince Jefri, a former client, might inadvertently come to the notice of those on Project Gemma. Therefore the injunction was granted.

Lord Browne-Wilkinson, Lord Clyde and Lord Hutton agreed. and Lord Hope delivered a concurring speech.

Regina v Kensington and Chelsea London Borough Council. Ex parte Kujtim Before Mr Justice Scott Baker

Budgment March 31 Where a destitute asylum seeker had been evicted from two lodgings by different accommodation managers because of his behaviour, a local council was under no mandatory obligation to meet his continuing need for accommodation under section 21(1) of the National Assistance Act 1948.

A discretionary power existed under section 47(1) of the National Health Service and Community Care Act 1990, and in reaching any decision the local council was entitled to take into account evidence of those evictions. Mr Justice Scott Baker so held in the Queen's Bench Division when dismissing an application for judicial review of the refusal by Kensington and Chelsea London Borough Council, by leuer of January 13, 1999, further to accommodate Mr Murigi Kujtim. Mr Kujtim, a Kosovan Albanian asylum seeker, had been evicted from his first lodgings on account of his violent behaviour towards

rules and regulations of the house.

He was told that he would be given one last chance. However, his behaviour at his second lodgings again led to his eviction.

The council interviewed Mr Kujam, when he was given an opportunity to comment on his eviction. Thereafter, the council concluded that the management's decision was justified, and that it did not have an open ended duty to continue providing accommodation.

Miss Elisabeth Appleby. QC and Mr Stephen Knafler for Mr Kujtim; Mr Ashley Underwood and Ms Rowena Champion for Kensington and Chelsea MR JUSTICE SCOTT BAKER said that section 21 of the 1948 Act was one of a species of provisions. in fact, the safety net provision, that was triggered by section 47 of the 1990 Act in relation to an individual.

If a local authority decided that an individual's needs called for the provision of services, residential accommodation was one of the services that could be provided. In cases such as the present it was necessary to begin by looking at section 47 of the 1990 Act and not section 21 of the 1948 Act. A local authority had a discretion under section 47(1) of the 1990 Act to decline to meet a need that it had assessed. The local authority had provided accommodation on more than one occasion, and in most circum-

how the discretion could properly be exercised against providing accommodation for a destitute asylum seeker. But, in his Lordship's judgment, there was not a mandatory obligation to provide accommodation whatever the circumstances.

As to whether there was a need for reassessment, the council had originally assessed Mr Kujum's needs, and decided that his needs called for the provision of accommodation, which was arranged through the vehicle of section 21 of The accommodation provided authority did not have to keep assessing his needs over and over again and meeting them. It was quite impracticable to impose in every case an obligation on the local authority to investigate issues between someone for whom it had arranged accommodation and hotel management. Provided the local authority acted reasonably in all the circumstances apparent to it, that would be sufficient. One had great sympathy for a

Kosovan refugee in the circum-stances described by Mr Kujtim but his Lordship could not conclude that the decision to refuse to provide accommodation for him was unlawful. The council was entitled to conclude that he had brought the acnodation problem on his own head and that it was not obliged to

PUNTERS and bookmakers were so critical of last week's Sagitta 2.000 Guineas dress rehearsals that they have been reduced to eavesdropping as members of the cast practice their lines before a mirror. Yesterday. Commander Collins. who disputes favouritism after lurking in his Manton lair all spring, could enjoy the twin benefits of privacy and familiar company in a discreet trial at Newbury racecourse. He duly prospered, but whether the same will be true of his backers is another matter.

Commander Collins worked with Mother Of Pearl and Bienamado. Peter Chapple-Hyam still feels unable to commit Mother Of Pearl to the Sagitta 1,000 Guineas, however so presumably she cannot present too much of a hindrance for now - while Bienamado is a staying type, who warms up for the Vodalone Derby in the Grosvenor Casinos Dante Stakes at York next

It would be alarming indeed should a Guineas favourite falter in such company, with just a dozen days to go. "But then he's not one to excite you at home." Chapple-Hyam said.
"They worked a mile and he finished a couple of lengths clear. My horses are just needing the run, but he won't blow up at Newmarket." Commander Collins relished a test over a mile when running away with the Racing Post Trophy in heavy ground last autumn, having just failed to collar Auction House over seven furlongs on his previous start. Auction House, who worked a little anonymously at Newbury on Saturday, is also heading straight to the Guineas but is by no means certain to preserve his advantage over a mile.

Equally, Commander Collins could prove vulnerable if conditions place an emphasis on speed, though Chapple-Hyam thinks otherwise. "He goes on any ground," he said. But I believe he is a better horse on fast going. In fact, I know he is." The irony is that a different private trial could well prove more significant than the races that caused such confusion at Newmarket and Newbury last week. Godolphin's trials in Dubai were strongly contested in every sense, and the outcome of the colts" "race" came as no surprise to David Elsworth — who trained Island Sands to win both his starts last season. "He's a very good horse," he said yester-day. "If you harness his energies, he will find gears all the way. They have good people riding out in Dubai, and they have obviously disciplined him well. He can come up and then he can quicken again."

The nascent Flat season formally takes the baton of public interest from National Hunt on their shared card at Sandown on Saturday. Bobbyjo. the Martell Grand National winner, was well served when weights for the 43rd Whitbread Gold Cup went up 11lb at yesterday's five-day entry stage — he is now just 4lb out of the handicap on his pre-Aintree rating. Being so unex-posed when adequate demand is made of his jumping and stamina on good ground, the Irish horse looks "thrown in".

Certainly he came to Liverpool a fresh horse, all but sprinting home from the el-bow, and Tommy Carberry was heartened by a school over hurdles yesterday. "We al-ways had the Whitbread in mind," the trainer said. "Liverpool did not seem to take much out of him and he has come out of it well." He could offer no such assurances of his son. Paul. Horse and rider seem certain, however, to present another spectacle deserving of to celebration over

Lost on the road to Newmarket

he conclusion to last year's Flat season came laced with the impression that the juvenile crop was brimful with promise. Any number of candidates for the mile classics were augmented by more than a handful with attractive prospects for the blue riband events over 12 furlongs. Then we witnessed a week of classic trials and the roof fell in. The only trainers left smiling were those yet to send their charges at the races.

While this scenario is hard-ly novel, it has rarely been so pronounced. It reeks of uncertainty when a once-raced maiden corners the 2,000 Guineas market, as Killer Instinct did before his odds-on defeat at Newbury. In normal circumstances a Frankie Dettori "trial" treble at Newmarket would have yielded yarns about his embarrassment of classic riches. Instead, the silence after Dettori-marshalled victories for Valentine Waltz. Bertolini and Compton Admiral suggested that we had wit-nessed a phoney war. It was much the same for Ki-eren Fallon at Newbury after the champion jockey clicked with a "trial" double — courtesy of Wince and Enrique. For Duty Free Stakes victory may have caused Fallon to reflect ruefully on her name, for Wince seems certain to keep Fallon from taking the ride on Moiava, the 1,000 Guineas favourite. As for Enrique, his somewhat laboured victory in the Tripleprint Stakes intimated once again that this talented colt may be best served by a test of speed.

Equally confusing were the magic-carpet messages from Dubai, where the unheralded Island Sands apparently held sway in the colts' trial. Even more bizarre was the pair of distaffers highlighted after the fillies' trial. Step forward

Zahrat Dubai and Pescara, both of whom finished ahead of Etizaaz - herself advanced though the speed shown by last week by her former trainer, John Dunlop, as more of a staying type than your typical 1.000 Guineas candidate.

So where does that leave us addicts of the classic scene? Well, we're plainly struggling for direction, if not quite lost inside Goldfinger's notorious Hall of Mirrors. Compton Admiral's Craven Stakes victory carried more significance than it attracted after the baffling effort of Mujahid, whose abject defeat provided the contest's talking point.

Suave Dancer, Compton Admiral has legitimate ambitions on the Derby - al-his dam, the Mtoto mare Sumoto, warrants an element of caution in respect of him staying the trip. Certainly horses with Compton's Admirai's blend of genes have triumphed at Epsom in the past. For all that, Compton Admiral will set a sharp standard at Newmarket on May I. But for a poor ride from Dettori, the colt would have downed Raise A Grand on his final juvenile outing at Sandown last year. And always beware the trainer content in defeat, as Peter Chapple-Hyam was after his Brancaster had chased home Compton Admiral at Newmarket. The inference was that Chapple-Hyam's Commander Collins is rated penney whose downbeat assessment of their private trials is invariably a calculated response. Its generals are too astute to generate increased expectation by touting a front-line candidate. One can almost hear them chuckling as they read of the British racing media's efforts to grapple with the worth of Zahrat Dubai. There also lurks the as-yet unresolved issue of whether Aljabr will actually qualify for a place in what threatens to be an oversubscribed Kentucky Derby field, It was said of the Sport of Kings that no amount of resources could ever buy an allembracing dominance. While this remains intrinsically true, the waning value of traditional Guineas trials graphically illustrates the sport's chang-ing face. Whatever your view of Godolphin's involvement one of its legacies is that Flat racing in April has become almost as irrelevant as the false dawn at Doncaster in March. ☐ Julian Muscat writes on Flat racing every Tuesday

PPP County Championship: Somerset suffer as Warwickshire upset the odds

Penney rolls on to Piper's tune

By Geoffrey Dean

EDGBASTON (first day of four: Somerset won toss): Warwickshire, with three firstinnings wickets in hand, have scored 356 for seven against Somerset

JAMIE COX must have been pleased to have won his first soss as Somerset captain. Edgbaston, on a particularly dank April morning and still covered at breakfast time in a white coat of frost, cannot have looked too attractive for batting to the Tasmanian. Nor should it have been. However, thanks to some Somerset bowling that was generally poor. Warwickshire cantered past 350 when they ought to have been dismissed for less than 200.

Such unexpected riches on a green, seaming pitch puts them in a very strong position. Their main concern will be the state of the ground. The water table, after twice the average winter rainfall and a deluge on Monday, is so high, according to Steve Rouse, the groundsman, that more rain today could prevent any further cricket in the match. Play began on time yesterday, but probably only because Rouse was working on the outfield as early as 5.40am.

Soft run-ups are always an impediment for big seam bowlers such as Caddick, but although he bowled some un-playable balls, his length was generally too short. The same could be said for all the visiting medium-pace bowlers, except, perhaps, Kerr. As a result, the Warwickshire batsbecause the ball seamed too much or because they were able to adjust.

By lunch, if Somerset had bowled decently, they could have had five or six wickets. Instead, the scoreboard read 98 for two, one of those being Knight, caught behind off a bottom-edged cut. If he was a little unlucky, then Wagh enjoyed more than his share of good fortune. Three times Caddick found his edge and three times David Shepherd, the umpire, signalled four as the ball eluded the slips.

Warwickshire scored an inordinate number of runs through third man, where Cox refused to post a fielder until late in the day. Piper, in particular, took advantage by continually running the ball behind square for four. This was the same pitch on which Piper scored his last championship century, in 1994, and, more famously, in the same year, on which Brian Lara amassed 501. Piper did not manage a half-century last season and, so well did he play with Penney in a crucial third-wicket stand of 124, that another century seemed to be reachable. However, Caddick found his edge with a beauty that left him and bounced.

Piper volunteered to replace the injured Ostler at No 5 before the match against Northamptonshire last week. Most observers would consider that to be too high for Piper, who totalled fewer than 300 runs last year, but such was the quality of his defence and shot-selection that he looked very much the part. His elevation means that Warwickshire can play six specialist bowl-

Mostly, though, it was Penney who held Somerset at bay, scurrying between the wickets and playing with feline tenacity. Somerset could not prise him out - in the important hours at least. His 73, from 170 balls - 67 more than Piper faced - was a welcome return to productivity after a dis-

As batting got easier against some tiring easier against some tiring bowlers, Smith and Welch men were not drawn forward enough. either being beaten also weighed in as Warwick-enough.

Stewart uses his county wisely

jah, Alec Stewart drifted progressively further from his best form. The World Cup is less than four weeks away and the England captain, who scored just 42 runs in four innings in the Coca-Cola Cup. needs time at the crease. He will make his first appearance of the season for Surrey in the PPP county championship today at Worcester.

Stewart intends to rest after the four-day game against Worcestershire and the CGU National League fixture against Northamptonshire on Sunday. Unless his touch returns, however, the commitment to Surrey may extend to the championship contest against Northamptonshire as well, before England convene to begin their preparations in Canterbury on May 2

Graham Thorpe and Adam Hollioake will also play today, although Hollioake will not captain the side until after the World Cup. Mark Butcher has taken charge for the first half of the season as Surrey try to achieve continuity and lighten the burden on their England trio.

We accept that the World

WITH each innings in Shar- Cup is an enormous event and we want to give England as much help as we can." Keith Medlycott, the Surrey manager, said. Such words are being echoed increasingly around the country. The counties have embraced the concept of central contracts and a firm structure is likely to be implemented next month.

Leicestershire will not risk Alan Mulially against Not-tinghamshire today. The leftarm seam bowler strained his side in Sharjah, but he expects to bowl in the nets before the weekend and play against Lancashire next week. Vince Wells will return for the champions, who are preserving an unbeaten run in the competition at Grace Road, stretching back to August 1995.

Lancashire include their three World Cup players — Neil Fairbrother, Ian Austin and Andrew Flintoff against Middlesex at Lord's. Chris Schofield, the young leg spinner, is also in the squad of 12. Middlesex welcome back Angus Fraser from Sharjah, while Derbyshire begin what could be a traumatic season against Glamorgan at the

PETER WYNNE-THOMAS ASSESSES THE LATEST ROUND OF COUNTY CHAMPIONSHIP MATCHES

Overall: Played 115, Warwickshire won 34, Somerset won 29.

First meeting: 1905. Trends: Warwickshire's first game of the season was affected by rain and ended in a draw. Somer set play their first game of 1999 after finishing 1998 with three wins, two defeats and a draw.

cent meetings: Having gained a first-innings lead of 235, Somerset won last year by eight wickets, their first win against Warwickshire since 1984. Man in form: Dougle Brown scored his maiden century for Warwickshire last week.

Worcester, today Overall: Played 114, Surrey won 42, Worcester-

Trends: Worcestershire were lucky to escape with a draw against Durham last week; Surrey should have won the drawn game with Gloucestershire. Recent meeting: Despite a fourth consecutive 100 from Graeme Hick, Surrey won last year's match by 79 runs. However, Surrey have not won at Worcester since 1983, when Monte Lynch made 112.

MRE v GLAMORGAN

Derby, today Overall: Played 100, Derbyshire won 36, Glamordan won 25.

First meeting: 1921. Trends: This is the first match of 1999 for both counties. Derbyshire won their final game of the 1998 championship, as did Glamorgan, but the latter's success followed two defeats and two draws. Recent meetings: Rain meant that not even the two first innings were completed in the 1998 game. The 1997 meeting was also a draw, but Derbyshire won the three previous matches.

Trends: Kent drew their match last week. This will be Hampshire's first game of 1999. They lost their last game in 1998 and drew the penultimate one. Recent meetings: A big margin decided the 1998 meeting, Kent winning by 292 runs. Their last defeat at Southampton came in 1989, when Robin Smith scored 182 for Hampshire and Rajesh Maru took eight for 41 in the final innings.

LEICESTERSHIRE V NOTIS

First meeting: 1895. Trends: This is Nottinghamshire's opening match, they ended 1998 with four successive losses. Leicestershire beat Essex last week and have won seven successive championship games.

SHEEHAN on BRIDGE

By Robert Sheehan, bridge correspondent

On today's hand there are two issues to bear in mind: the first is that trumps may break badly; the second is that even if they split, you have only nine top tricks. You need to develop an extra trick in either clubs or hearts, and the timing on the hand is not at all easy. You cannot afford to focus on one issue to the exclusion of the other.

In the international teams match between Brazil and the Netherlands at the Forbo Tournament in the Nether-lands, Zia was playing as a ringer for Brazil. The unsuccessful declarer for the Netherlands got a diamond lead to his contract of Four Spades and immediately played on trumps, assuming that he needed something favourable to develop in either hearts or clubs. When the trumps failed to split he had no chance. He actually played four rounds of trumps, but West got off play with the ace and queen of hearts, and declarer now had to lose one trick in each suit. By contrast, Zia won the

jack of hearts, a thoughtful play designed to try to build a home for his potential club loser. West took his ace of hearts and played a second diamond which East won to switch to a club. Zia won the ace of clubs, played a spade to the ace and carefully ruffed a diamond in hand before playing a second top spade. When the 4-1 trump break came to light, Zia continued with a heart to the king and a heart ruff, after which he could cash the king of clubs and exit with a third club. When West had to take the trick, he was forced to lead from his jack of spades into Zia's tenace and Zia had avoided losing a trump trick.

Viswanathan Anand, once considered the most likely challenger to Garry Kasparov's world throne, had a below par performance at the Dos Hermanas tournament in Spain. A major contributory factor to his problems was the lack of effectiveness of his black defences. In today's game, Anand tries to improve on Kasparov -Ivanchuk from Linares earlier this year, but still succumbs in spite of his innovative play. White: Vladimir Kramnik

Davids proclaims message to strike rivals with dread

Matt Dickinson in Turin finds a tormented midfield player finally at peace with himself

There are so many tales of brawling with strangers, insulting journalists, feuderally wreaking havoc that it is easy to forget just how wonderfully talented Edgar Davids is. Perhaps that is why he reminds the world at every opportunity.

"It is an honour to play with Zidane," the Dutchman said recently. "but then he feels the same about me." Indeed, anyone who has spent five minutes with him has a different story of his breathtaking conceit. "My name is Edgar Davids," he told a baffled Richard Krajicek, the tennis player, years ago in an Amsterdam bar, "and you'll be hearing more from me." But he has

While Zidane prompted well-deserved paeans for his performance on one leg at Old Trafford in the European Cup semi-final, first leg, it was Davids who was the dynamo for Juventus. A midfield colossus at his present peak of form, he is equipped with the pace of a sprinter. the physique of a middleweight boxer, the stamina of a marathon runner and a left foot that most footballers would kill for. As for what goes on inside his head, no one knows.

Until his move to Juventus two years ago, his mood swings were as violent as his tackles. He did not play for his country for two years after telling Guus Hiddink, the Holland coach, during Euro 96 that he had his head shoved up other players' backsides, while his transfer to AC Milan from Ajax, with whom he won the European Cup in 1995 and lost in the final in 1996, threatened to push a tempestuous man over the edge.

When two hoodlums made the mistake of trying to mug him at a set of traffic lights in Milan, he leapt out of his Porsche and gave the pair of them a good hiding Keane and Scholes know the feeling — and while he won that little fight, he was losing the battle with his own explosive temper that was not helped by a broken leg. "Going to Milan was a mistake." Davide, 26, said, "and I don't like to talk about my experiences there. It was a bad time, the most bitter period of my career at club level and like my feelings of despair at Euro

96. But I tried to use it all in a positive manner and it has allowed me to mature and change as a person. It told me that being a world-class footballer is about handling yourself at all times."

It would be foolhardy to say that Davids has mellowed entirely, but there are signs at least that he has conquered some of his demons. Now vice captain of his country, he appears to have found, in Turin, a city in which he enjoys the pace of life and, in Juventus, a team that he feels is worthy of his skills. Marcel-lo Lippi is rumoured to want to take him to Internazionale this summer, but he questions why he should leave the club "that has finally made me fulfilled" and with whom he is hoping to play his fourth Euro-pean Cup final in five years.

His football is flourishing, his rage is calmed, but his superiority complex remains wonderfully in-tact, as he proved in dismissing Beckham, Giggs and Keane with typical disdain. "Manchester Unit-ed are supposed to have the best midfield in Europe," he said, "but we had the better of them at Old train running over them. I have no fears of them any more. I want to get at them again. The higher the stakes, the tougher the fight, the better overall feeling I get. I can produce. I am a winner."

He will be a winner tomorrow unless the United camp work out a better strategy than in the first leg. when Davids and Deschamps ran the game because Keane was preoccupied by the deep-lying Zidane. The Irishman can be expected to push forward more tomorrow, which will ensure some midfield

You English have this obsession with a warrior's spirit," Davids said. "Our coach reminds us every day that Ferguson's team will not give up until the last seconds in furin. He will fire them up, make sure they come at us like madmen. It will be tough, but we know what

Alex Ferguson, the United man-ager, has talked of his team being ready to eat people, but in Davids. whose nicknames vary from the pit bull to the piranha, Juventus have a footballer who will readily bite back. Do not watch it alone.

Trouble and strife dogs Zidane's preparation

By MATT DICKINSON AND STEPHEN WOOD

ZINEDINE ZIDANE'S hopes of leaving Juventus this summer anpeared to have improved considerably yesterday after an extraordinary outburst from Gianni Agnelli the club's owner, in which the multi-millionaire accused Zidane of being under the thumb. It would, at least, explain Zidane's expanding bald spot.

The timing of Agneth's attack is baffling, given that Zidane is vital to Juventus's hopes of beating Man-chester United tomorrow in the European Cup semi-final second leg, but he appears to have lost patience with the France international, who has admitted that his wife wants to move to a city by the sea.

Juventus will have no shortage of offers for Zidane, 26, who has three years left on his contract and would cost at least £18 million, but Agnelli is bitter nonetheless. "Zi-dane is not suffering from homesickness, he is suffering because he is under the control of his wife," he said. 'I took him aside and asked him: 'Who is the boss: you or your wife? He told me that, since they have had two sons, his wife was in Juventus have a history of selling players at their peak and they are unlikely to keep Zidane against his wishes. Alessandro Del Piero. 24, who is absent with a long-term injury, is also expected to depart. Agnelli hinted yesterday that Del Piero might follow Lippi, the former Juventus coach, to Internazionale.

It is probably wishful thinking for United to hope that the row between Zidane and his club will detract from his performance tomorrow night. United must score in Turin after the I-I draw in the first leg and Alex Ferguson, the manager, is hopeful that Ryan Giggs will recover from his injury in time to play. Giggs is still struggling with the ankle problem that he sustained last Wednesday, towards the end of United's FA Cup semi-final victory over Arsenal at Villa Park. The Wales international has not trained properly since, but he was due to fly out to Turin with the rest of the United party this morning.

Gullit bans Cup talk

IT HAS long been assumed that the monochrome similarity between the club's shirts and a feathered vertebrate is the reason for Newcastle United's traditional nickname. Once, perhaps, but no longer. Since Ruud Gullit replaced Kenny Dalglish as the Newcastle manager last autumn, the magpie has become an increasingly appropriate mascot.

Superstition is a familar friend to sportsman, but it has emerged that Gullit has taken precaution to another level. After bemoaning a club "curse", asking a priest to bless St James' Park and insisting that his side sport lucky white socks, Gullit has forbidden his players, ahead of the Final against Manchester United next month, from taking part in promotional work involving the FA Cup trophy. Axa. the sponsors of the comBy GEORGE CAULKIN petition, had arranged a photo session with Robert Lee, the former Newcastle captain, six children representing the Kits in the Community programme and the same famous item of silverware Gullit won when at Chelsea two years ago. The three groups assembled at the County Durham training ground of the club yesterday, only to be turned away by one irate Dutchman.

We take the FA Cup all over the country and most people love to get their hands on it," Laurie Good, director of the firm that provides security for the trophy, said. "It was thought that to touch it would bring good luck. Superstition obviously comes into it as the Cup Final approaches, but I have never come across anything like this before."

fast growing used to it. Gullit was pictured munching on a crucifix during the semi-final victory over Tottenham Hotspur. For Lee, the losing skipper in the final last year. the incident yesterday was a further setback. "I didn't touch the Cup last year either," he said. "I didn't get the chance."

O'Neil earns recall

CRAIG BROWN has assembled a Scotland squad carefully for the international against Germany in Bremen next week, but other managers may prove just as diligent in dismantling it. Given the timing of the fixture, clubs around son than ever to resent the intrusion of international football and could find ingenious medical grounds for withdrawing players. Of the 23 men named in the party yesterday, 16 earn their living in teams aspiring to a championship or attempting to flee the relegation zone. It would be natural if Celtic. Rangers, Aberdeen, Dundee, Dundee United. Heart of Midlothian, Everton and Blackburn Rovers were to cast a jaundiced eye over requests that their employees should divert energy to another cause.

By KEVIN McCarra

Brown is used to unfavourable working conditions. After the 2-1 defeat by the Czech Republic in the European championship tie at Celtic Park, the manager has to accelerate his redevelopment of the side. With that purpose in mind, he has shunned some players who would normally merit selection.

Thus Colin Calderwood, who has revived Aston Villa since his move from Tottenham Hotspur, has not been restored to the party. "I was tempted," Brown said, "and if we had been playing for three points next week, I would have picked him." Instead, the place has gone to Brian O'Neil, 26, whose one cap came against Australia in 1996.

O'Neil was once considered to be a player of high promise, best position placed an element of instability at the core of his career. With Vfl Wolfsburg, however, he has settled into a man-marking role.

Don Hutchison should make his debut in attack. where he will probably be partnered by Billy Dodds. The need for renovation in the forward line is great. With 22 goals from 134 international appearances, Lothar Matthaus, of Germany, has scored ten times more than the entire Scotland squad combined.

HOW TO ENTER YOUR FANTASY LEAGUE TEAM

Select a team of 11 players - four batsmen, four bowlers, two all-rounders and a wicketkeeper. A maximum of two players from any one country are allowed in your team at any time (see transfers below). TO ENTER BY PHONE call our 24-hour hotline 0640 67 88 96 (+44 870 901 4210 ex UK) and follow the instructions. 0640 calls cost 60p a minute, last about six minutes and must be made on a touch-tone DTFM phone. Give the name of your team (max 16 characters) and the three-digit codes of your 11 players. You will receive a PIN number so you can make transfers and check your scores. To qualify for the start of the tournament telephone entries must be made by 10am on Friday May 14. TO ENTER BY POST complete the entry form, left, and include a £2.50 sterling entry fee (£10 ex UK & Rol). To qualify for the start of the Cricket World Cup postal entries must arrive by Thursday May 13. All entrants will receive a confirmation letter by post, showing their team and PIN number, 7-10 days after their entry is received. You cannot make transfers until you receive your PIN

HOW YOUR FANTASY LEAGUE TEAM WILL SCORE POINTS

SCORING SYSTEM Every player in your team is awarded or deducted points for runs scored, wickets taken, catches and stumpings, as follows: BATTING Every 10 runs in an innings Every 50 runs in an innings ... .. 3 bonus ots (eg A score of 50 will be awarded 5 points plus 3 bonus points: a total of 8 points) Every player out for less than 5 runs (excl bowlers) ... Every player out for 0 runs (excl bowlers) -

There are also bonus points awarded or lost according to Economy Rate (runs conceded per over ratio) Bowlers can score bonus points for low economy rates and lose them for high ones. The economy rate is an indication of how good a bowler is at not letting batsmen score runs against him. So, by taking the number of runs scored by the opposition during a bowler's match overs and dividing them by the number of overs bowled, an economy rate is established. A low economy rate will gain you points while a high one will lose you points. A bowler must bowl a minimum of five overs to quality. Bowler with an economy rate of 3.00 runs or under ______ 5 pts Bowler with an economy rate of 3.01 runs to 4.00 runs .... 2 pts Bowler with an economy rate of 4.01 runs to 5.00 runs .... 0 pts Bowler with an economy rate of 5.01 runs to 6.00 runs .... -1 pt Bowler with an economy rate of 6.01 runs or above ....... -2 pts (e.g. A bowler taking 4 for 30 in 10 overs, an economy rate of 3.00 runs per over, will be awarded 8 points plus 5 bonus points a total of 13 points)

HOW TO MAKE TRANSFERS

FIELDING

Managers can make transfers to strengthen their teams. From now until the start of the tournament at 10am on May 14, you can make as many changes to your team as you like by calling the 24-hour transfer line on 0640 62 51 25 (+44 870 901 4296 ex UK) with your PIN to hand. Follow the instructions on the line. Your transfers must result in a new team in the correct format. From the start of the tournament until the start of the Super Six stage at 10am on June 4 you can make a further six team changes. After this you cannot make any further changes to your team. Changes made by 10am on any particular day will become active for matches from that day onwards. If changes are made after 10am then they will become active from the following day's matches

Doherty lets maximum opportunity through his hands

By PHIL YATES

KEN DOHERTY is never more keenly focused than when competing at the Crucible Theatre. Many players are intimidated by the very thought of it, but Doherty, the winner of the Embassy world championship in 1997 and the runner-up last year. is

This is what it's all about - pressure-cooker stuff," Doherty said after completing a 10-3 first-round victory over Steve James yesterday. Doherty, who will meet Nigel Bond for a place in the quarter-finals, was sharp, confident and, totally at ease. Indeed, it would have been an ideal introduction to the most important event of his year had it not been for a costly misjudgment in the twelfth frame.

Leading 8-3. Doherty potted 13 reds with blacks to foster realistic hope of compiling his first 147 break in competition. The timing would have been impeccable, considering the £20,000 highest-break award and £147,000 maximumbreak bonus available.

A record seven 147s have been compiled in various professional tournaments this season, but only four have been constructed at the Crucible since it first hosted the championship in 1977. Thus, the desire to emulate Cliff Thorburn, Jimmy White, Stephen Hendry and Ronnie O'Sullivan remains strong. The open colours suggested that Doherty was poised to achieve the perfect run. However, in potting the thirteenth

Power cut brings end to McRae's charge

COLIN McRAE'S hopes of a hat-trick disappeared yesterday when the electronic brain on his Ford Focus robbed the Safari and Portugal rally-winning car of power halfway through the opening leg of the Rally of Catalonia.

McRae lost four minutes as he limped through La Fullaca-Arbucies stage in the mountains above Barcelona. He was driving so slowly that two other cars passed him on the treacherous hairpin corners. The Scot then lost another two minutes on the Cladells stage before Ford team mechanics could reach the car.

was a sudden loss of power about halfway into the stage," McRae said. "I checked the engine, but there was nothing obviously wrong. We managed to keep within our allotted time and stay in the rally. but any hope of points has almost certainly gone." Ford were able to fix the car and send McRae back out into the fray after dropping to 39th place. The team told the 1995 world champion to use the rest of the rally as a test but he went on to set the fifth-fastest time on the penultimate stage before the finish of the leg in Lloret de Mar on the Costa

"It's a real shame. I had hopes of making it three wins here," McRae said. "Now we will have to use the rest of the rally as a test and come back to win in Corsica next month."

The rally was led last night by Jesus Puras and Philippe Bugalski, the Citroën pair. The French kit cars are built to different regulations than the world rally cars driven by the likes of McRae and on drive machines are lightning quick. "The other teams always call for us to be banned when we are faster than them on asphalt," Bugalski said, but tomorrow's stages are better for the four-wheel drive world rally cars and then rain quite small." Didier Auriol, of France, the winner here last vear, is in third place and Carlos Sainz. his Toyota team-mate and the local favourite, is fourth. The Spaniard called yesterday for spectators to keep back after celled due to crowd problems. Tommi Makinen, the world champion, is in fifth place and Freddy Loix, his Mitsubishi team-mate, who is still recovering from injuries sustained in an accident on the Safari Rally, is sixth. Richard Burns, of Great Britain, is in seventh place in his Subaru.

London plans to stage showdown

By David Powell, athletics correspondent

THE thin blue line of the Flora London Marathon may have been more Rowan Atkinson than Ron Hill at times on Sunday, such were the eccentricities of the event, but the stars of the show will almost certainly be back next year.

Joyce Chepchumba and Abdelkader El Mouaziz said yesterday that they would be keen to defend their titles and David Bedford, who pulls together the elite fields, has taken the first steps towards arranging the head-to-head that would be the envy of all commercial marathons.

As London's decision to mock the generally accepted world record set by Tegla Loroupe, of Kenya, in Rotterdam last year drew a stinging response from the Netherlands yesterday, it emerged that Loroupe's representative has opened discussions with Bedford for next year. Loroupe's run of 2hr 20min 47sec in Rotterdam, where she was paced by men, so outraged London that it dropped its traditional world-record bonus and put up $125,000 (£84,000) for the first athlete to beat the best time in a womenonly race.

Chepchumba took the money, yet her time of 2hr 23min 22sec was not even the fastest by a Kenyan woman on the day. In Rotterdam, Loroupe ran 34sec quicker. London hopes to resolve who is the best of the two women next year. Volker Wagner, who represents them both, said: There are two things to decide: one is the money, but more important is the Olympic Games. Would one want to go there having been beaten?" If the Chepchumba record was a bizarre entry into Lon-don Marathon folklore, the circumstances of El Mouaziz's victory were no less so. He ran away from some outstanding athletes, who paid the price of watching each other. The only barrier to him returning next year may be his national federation insisting on him racing in Marrakesh.

Can We Still Be Friends? Channel 5, 7pm

Yet another "relationships" game show would hardly be worth a mention save for the fact that this one is so cruel. Couples whose time together has turned sour stitch each other up in front of the cameras in the name of what Channel 5 calls "therapy". Schadenfreude, if you like that sort of thing.

BBC1, 8-30pm

The extraordinary opening sequence shows a power station tower being blown up — and how the event is perceived by pigeons roosting on it. snails crawling about nearby, and flies in the vicinity. This illustrates how some creatures shrink time while others (such as the snail) simply do not experience anything which occurs in less than a quarter of a second. Stunning photography and visual trickery also demonstrate the differing metabolic rates of the elephant and the elephant shrew, the hummingbird and the sloth, and how temperature affects not only the mobility but the vision of cold-blooded animals.

Channel 4, 8-30pm

The rally champion Penny Mallory joins the team of Mike Brewer and Jason Barlow for a new series of Channel 4's answer to Top Gear. all the more welcome for being fresher and less mannered than the BBC's mob. collection of decisions: whether to have had an abortion; whether to stop going out late, drinking and smoking during her pregnancy; whether to obey the 6pm curfew imposed by the children's home after the baby is born; whether to wait until she is 18 before getting a flat of her own through the housing department. None of these decisions, apart from the first, comes easily to Hayley, whose young life was clearly badly affected by the break-up of her parents marriage. The cost of the help that social services in North Durham provides for her is only at more than $50,000. provides for her is put at more than £50,000.

A Life of Grime BBC1, 9.35pm

Behind the groan-worthy punning title is a good series following a year in the working life of the environmental health officers of Haringey, North London. John Peel narrates the films, which probably should not be watched while you are eating. Among the problems addressed in the first are cockroach infestation, an illegal street trade in goat meat and a two-bedroom flat in which 15 cats and five dogs are being kept. Next week: a flat in which a dead body has been left to rot for six weeks.

Duke Ellington — Such Sweet Thunder

Russell Davies, the writer and presenter of this trio of programmes about a true giant of jazz, has Shakespeare's Hippolyta to thank for the quotation he has borrowed in choosing the title of the series. It does fit his subject like a glove because, as Davies reminds us, though Ellington's music was often judged to be joyful, it was also underconsed with a deep melancholy. Ellington underscored with a deep melancholy. Ellington was an astonishing amalgam of complementary talents: composer, bandleader, orchestrator and piano player. Anyone who knows anything about Davies's previous profiles of some of the great pioneers of jazz can confidently expect that all four of theses elements will be explored during this series.

Given the name of the series. I'm surprised how few percussive effects there are in episode one, though the last note we hear is played on what sounds like a tabor. As for the rest, it's shawm, lute, bagpipe and human voice all the way. Part one of The Drums of Banle is about the Crusades. This gives us the rare opportunity to hear a lament which Richard I is said to have composed while incarcerated in an Austrian castle. past 20 years has been the absurd division between town and country, as if the one was on a different planet from the other. Such is the obsession with things rural that icons such as the Range Rover often get no closer to a fourwheel drive environment than a spattering from street cleaners.

The fightback of the city is long overdue. It may have begun in New York, which has never lacked for vibrancy and excitement but which tended to be the sort of place where Gucci on Fifth Avenue had become a convenience store; it was a convenient store for replacing the wallet you had just had stolen. New York has cured many of its ills in the past few years by dint of tougher policing and other methods. The policing, at least the official version that the taxpayers support, has been well documented so last night the first part of a ne of the more depressing social phenomena of the (BBC2), concentrated on the other with responsibility. This predimethods and on some of the less desirable consequences.

This was very much a personal view by the presenter, Professor Harvey Molotch of the LSE. The programme was something of a trip home for Molotch, who spent his student days in the city. The changes that he reported on may have some important lessons for London, subject of Wednesday's programme in the series. However, there was an early health warning when an invest-ment banker told Molotch: 'Whatever I tell you today probably won't be the same tomorrow." True, but corporate America, and in particular Internet America. has played a huge role in making Manhattan liveable again: which candidate for mayor of London will offer the same blueprint?

words as if they were bagels and cates a caring corporate sector and, on the New York model, involves "business improvement districts" in which corporate cash is used to improve the working and living environment.

no corporation dustcart strays. Instead, business pays for the street cleaning and the security. The presence of corporate security men produced Molotch's key caveat, which was that these atriums and air-conditioned malls are being cleared of "undesirables", which is basically people who do not "look right": vagrants, smokers, that sort of person.

Oh yes, and street traders. Over in Greenwich Village, where openair trading still (just about) survives, a bookseller called Hakim Hasan said: "The sidewalk constitutes the last bastion of democratic REVIEW contact in New York City." Swish toilers in the industries that have funded the clean-up take the view that a mugging is a democratic contact most of us can live without, but the sanitising of an environment has the same effect as the pasteurising of milk: it takes out the good bacteria along with the bad. With cities as with milk, we won't know if the price is worth paying until it is too late.

far opened last night and concludes tonight, so watch part two if you missed part one. Butterfly Collectors (ITV) is from the same team that wrote and produced Cracker. It lacks some of the tautness of Cracker but it is a classy and clever piece of work, all the more so for starting off as if it is a routine police thriller.

Pete Postlethwaite as the police inspector McKeown, and Jamie Draven as the 17-year-old Dex are terrific, totally convincing, separately and together. They meet when McKeown arrests Dex as a murder suspect but their unlikely relationship continues when McKeown learns that Dex is bringing up his younger brother and sister alone in a council house. McKeown is disillusioned with police work, even to the extent of regarding a murder inquiry as scarcely worth the bother:

know why he died, but they don't know, they'll make it up, because they're bored out of their skulls and they're flattered we asked."

ot the least of the eleverness in Butterfly Collectors is that the viewer often feels a step ahead of the detective. Surely McKeown is out on a limb? Surely Dex, who has built a beautiful garden behind his house, is too good to be true? Both of those smug assumptions are assisted near the end of part one when McKeown helps Dex to steal a shrub.

The writing (by Paul Abbott) has the crispness and world-weary touches of humour that characterised Cracker and Jean Stewart's direction maintains the pace without ever overlooking the detail, a trick that cannot be easy to pull off or it would happen more often in television drama.

Of course the real life of the police is neither half as interesting nor half as complex, but I am still having trouble trying to dislike Cop Shop (ITV). I ought to hate this series about the policing of Gosport in Hampshire, even more so now that it has turned into a soppy yarn about coppers in love.

Yet there is something slightly olde worlde about the programme. However, last night's episode was made by a 16-year-old car thief whose career was intimately related to the crime stats: when he was locked up, car thefts went down.

The lad, known as Billy (not his real name), did not always steal cars. On one occasion, needing to get to a court appearance, he stole a moped. We saw two policemen taking Billy on a tour of the town during which he admitted 21 other car thefts (with which he will not of course be charged), thus tidying up the crime figures. Car owners will be thrilled to hear that.

Fowler's folly fails to put off Arsenal

By MATT DICKINSON

ROBBIE FOWLER'S lurch from one sorry episode to another could have a happy ending if Liverpool tire of his controversial antics. Arsenal remain interested purchasers and are hopeful that the Merseyside club may yet decide to wash their hands of the England striker and his troubles.

Fowler's latest appearance on the front pages followed an attack on him that left him with a broken nose. A man has been charged with assault after the incident in a Liver-pool hotel in the early hours of Sunday morning and while there is no suggestion that Fowler was in any way to blame, he appears unable to evade scandal at present.

Fowler, 24, was hoping to keep his nose clean after a Football Association disciplinary hearing at which he was suspended for two matches for homosexual taunts at Graeme Le Saux and banned for four matches for a goal celebration in which he appeared to pretend to snort

The FA, and his club, each fined him £32,000 — a week's wages - and, apart from posland, he will not play again Fowler signed a new fiveyear contract at Anfield only a few months ago, which ap-peared to have ended specula-tion that he might follow Steve McManaman out of the club this summer, but the succession of controversial incidents may persuade Liverpool to listen to offers.

One of those is almost cer-tain to come from Highbury, where Arsène Wenger, the Arsenal manager, remains a

That is not the case with Arsenal, who seem certain to spend heavily on a striker this summer. Nicolas Anelka's repeated complaints about the loneliness of life in London

Fowler has continued to score goals despite the controversy have sparked interest from all over Europe and Arsenal expect him to depart sooner rather than later. Barcelona is a possible destination and Wenger could expect to recoup at least as many millions as Fowler would cost. It appears certain that he will test Liverpool's patience with the A move may do Fowler, as have been forced to sell him this summer if he had not renewed his contract because, with only one year remaining on his previous deal, they would not have risked him departing like McManaman on a free transfer.

Unless the team improves drastically in the coming months, Fowler may have some regrets in re-signing if Liverpool do decide to let matters calm down over the summer and keep him to his ex-

Gretzky leaves everyone ice cold

Devlin Barrett

IT HAS been on the lips of every sport fan in North America for the past week. Wayne Gretzky, at 38, is retiring from ice hockey. It cannot be true. It is true. It happened here in New York on Sunday,

a thundering ovation inside

Madison Square Garden to say goodbye to the greatest player the game has known. The United States has now lost two of its finest sportsmen in a year, Gretzky and Michael Jordan. On Sunday, Jordan called Gretzky to give him some advice on life after the game, telling him to enjoy the send-off and to get excited about becoming a full-time dad. But there was also advice about the downside of hanging up the skates. "Your golf game is not going to get better, so don't think that will help," Jordan told him. "It will probably get worse, because you've got

Basketball and ice hockey fans will need time, too, time to recover. Jordan did things that no one else could; Gretzky saw things that no one else could . His final game for the New Yopri Rangers, against Pittsburgh Penguins, proved one last time that whatever age and injury may have taken away, they have not touched his tear-stained eyes. After an emotional 20-minute pre-game ceremony to bonour his career, Gretzky, known as "The Great One" since the age of 10, reminded everybody once again what made him so special.

During his career, he shattered 61 ice hockey records - itself a record and Paul Kariya, today's brightest young star, would have to play until he is 46 to equal Gretzky's tallies of 894 goals and 1,963 assists.

First Jordan, now Gretzky. For fans who live on either sport, the colours on the uniforms will never again be quite so bright. Gretzky, retired? It will be a long time before anyone here really be-

Wise escapes 'biting' penalty

DENNIS WISE, the Chelsea captain, was perhaps due a change of fortune in a season blighted by personal controversy. He received it yesterday from Uefa, the European governing body of football, which decided that he had no case to answer for the alleged "biting" incident during Chelsea's Cup Winners' Cup semifinal, first leg against Real Mallorca at Stamford Bridge 12 days ago. Wise became involved with Elena

Marcelino, the Mallorca defender, and appeared to sink his teeth into Marcelino's shoulder. Although the unaffectionate gesture was not noticed by the referee, it was captured on television, replayed a number of times and subsequently reproduced in national newspapers. After it had been drawn to the attention of Uefa. he was charged with "improper conduct". Although Wise vehemently proclaimed his innocence — "I did not bite him, I was By Russell Kempson ust gesturing to bite him," he said - a Uefa disciplinary committee met yesterday to consider his case. It concluded that a fine or suspension was not appropriate, but censured the fiery midfield player for his actions.

A Uefa spokesman said: "Sanctions can be imposed for incidents of misconduct not seen by the referee only if such conduct corresponds to gross unsportsmanship. The incident must be so serious that failing to punish it would contradict general legal opinion.

"After reviewing the evidence, the disciplinary body felt that although the player's unsporting gesture warrants clear disapproval, there is no legal basis in Uefa's regulations for imposing a disciplinary sanction. The case was therefore dis-

Wise, who has been sent off four times and missed 15 matches because of suspension this season, can consider himself fortunate. Blaming the Uefa charge on a concerted media campaign, rather than questioning his lack of self-control, only sullies even further his much-tarnished reputation.

Whether he actually bit Marcelino or simply pretended to is almost irrelevant. It was a stupid, albeit instinctive, act from an experienced professional.

Gwyn Williams, the Chelsea assistant manager, described the verdict as "sensible", a predictable reaction from a club that fiercely protects its own and one that was probably tinged with relief.

Wise is now available for the second leg of the semi-final in Majorca on Thursday, with the tie finely balanced at l-l, and his tenacious leadership — the more acceptable side of his character - will be needed.

Austin seeks cover from sponsor

THESE days, publicity-hungry sportsmen and women will, it seems, do anything for

Austin, a beach volleyball player, hopes that as little coverage as possible will gain her maximum exposure.

The photograph of herself around which she has built her one-woman campaign for funding is a clear reference to a television advertisement for a well-known brand of German car, in which a female naturist guards her modesty with a strategically-placed placard reading "I don't play volleyball". Austin. 30, is ranked No I in the United Kingdom in a sport that is now an Olympic event. Unlike Audrey Cooper and Mo Glover, the Great Britain representatives in the Atlanta Olympic Games, she has no world ranking and is desperately short of the funding that she requires to take such as the World Series event in Canada in June and, with luck, the Sydney Olympics next year.

Part of the problem is a lack of publicity and she hopes that the photograph will put that right. "I've won every competition in Great Britain for the last two years," she said. "I've been undefeated, but I've never had a write-up." The photograph was taken in her back garden in the North Devon village of Croyde, by her husband, Nick. Had he needed much persuading? "He's all for it." she said. "With beach volleyball, you have to use any form of publicity you can." And, some might say, women's costumes in such sports as volleyball are not exactly designed to leave much to the imagination in any case. She needs £1,000 to get to part in overseas competition. Canada - "but I'd also have restaurant supervisor at Croyde Bay holiday villagel. We're talking £15-20,000 to get to Sydney 2000." In case anyone accuses her of bare-faced cheek in demanding assistance, it is worth pointing out that she funded herself for three months' training in Brazil this winter with Moni-

If all goes well, Austin will be partnered in Canada, and thereafter, by Monique Oliver, who is based in the United States but is a British passport -holder. Vanessa Malone, Austin's regular partner, was not in a position to commit herself to the demands of international competition for which Aus-tin had always hankered.

"T've always looked towards that, but I've never put myself in the position to do it." Austin said. "T've decided that it's
